First and foremost, let me send a prayer of gratitude to the Almighty for making all this happen. For 36 long months I have been working on this thesis in the midst of my other duties; I managed to complete my task on time. But I must say, I was not alone – I had a good team with me. And to this team, I owe my acknowledgement.

It is said that the longest journey is the first step and it was Dr. Beulah Shekhar, Associate Professor, Coordinator, Victimology and Victim Assistance, Human Rights and Duties Education, Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice and my Guide, who helped me take my first step into the unknown world of ‘research’. I am lucky to have her as my mentor and guide, since she is one person, who had mentored many a research scholar. So my heartfelt gratitude to Dr. Beulah Shekhar, whom I had met in 2002 – So this was in my destiny, Dr. Beulah, a chance meeting, which has paved the way for my journey into research.

Each one of my team is included in my gratitude list, which is very long; and so I name a select few without whom this thesis would never have happened. I am ever indebted to the Police Department, which I come from. I thank IGP. Tr. Arunachalam, IPS, who granted me permission to pursue my dream of procuring a doctorate. It is my fortune to gratefully acknowledge the support of special individuals like ADGP Tr. T. Rajendran, IPS and Tr. Radhakrishnan IPS for their encouragement all through my research. My gratitude extends to the then Tirunelveli range DIG Tr. K.P. Shanmugha Rajeswaran, IPS, who enabled me in the data collection.
