ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

It is my great pleasure and privilege, as I submit this thesis, to acknowledge the contributions of various persons and institutions, who have made possible the undertaking, as well as the accomplishment of this task.

At the outset, I express my heartfelt gratitude to the Madigas of Konaseema, and Andhra Pradesh in general, who graciously allowed me to embark on the hermeneutical journey of this research, with them, especially during a very momentous phase of their own journey towards identity and autonomy, in the climactic days of the Dandora movement. I am thankful to the Madiga mothers, brothers and sisters, who bestowed their care on me, by way of providing food and shelter, during my live-in experiences in the Madiga hamlets of Konaseema. The resourceful contributions towards the research, of many a Madiga activist and leader are remembered and acknowledged with thankfulness. In a special way, I record the contribution of Krishna Madiga, Suresh Madiga, Krishna Chaitanya and late Mr Ebenezer of Kesinakurupalem.

I recall with gratitude, the farsightedness and dynamic vision of Rev. Fr Benjamin Puthota S.D.B., my former Provincial, in sending me for this doctoral research, in the secular ambient of the University of Madras. I am grateful to the Salesian province of Hyderabad, and especially the present provincial Fr Medabalimi Balaswamy S.D.B., for being with me, during the period of my research, and evincing keen interest in its successful completion. In a very special way, I recall with affectionate gratitude, the services of Rev. Fr T.V. Antony, the Provincial Economist, who facilitated the smooth progress of the research, by making available the necessary finances, with promptness.

I place on record my profound gratitude to the Society of Jesus, Mary and Joseph (JMJ) and its governing body, for granting me substantial funds, towards the research, under Project Wellsprings, as an expression of their global commitment to the empowerment of the subaltern peoples.
At this juncture, my heart goes forth in gratitude to Prof. Dr Felix Wilfred, the Head of the Department of Christian Studies and the supervisor of this study. An internationally acknowledged theologian and author, his chosen and deeply committed path to make of theology into a discipline at the service of human promotion and the empowerment of the subalterns, has always challenged and inspired me. His praxis oriented and penetrating way of theologizing, whereby theology is made to dialectically interact with the other sciences in transdisciplinarity, has gone into the methodological texture of my own research. I am grateful to him for having affirmed, encouraged and nurtured my potential as a researcher into the subaltern terrain, and making my research grounded, while at the same time, giving freedom and space for the philosophical and the theoretical leaning in me. More than all, his deep capacity for friendship has enriched me, as his heart for the poor has inspired me.

I acknowledge my gratitude to Prof. Dr Thomas George, the former Head of the Department, who admitted me into the Department, and who was always solicitous about my progress in research, and my other academic endeavours. I have been deeply touched by his deep humanity and magnanimity. I would like to place on record my deep joy and gratitude, that I was able to pursue my research in this vibrant Department, founded by him, in the ambient of the civil space of a state University.

I am thankful to the other faculties of the Department. I thank Dr Joe Mannath, for his care and concern for me. I am grateful to Dr S.J. Anthonysamy, for his approachability and the lucidity of his very contextualized classes in biblical hermeneutics. I am thankful to Dr Sampathkumar for his humane affability. Dr Arockiadass always inspired me by his unassuming approachability and his eye for the local and the marginal.

I am grateful to Mr Lourdusamy, for his services in the Departmental library. In a very special way, I am indebted to Ms Rexy Jose, for her sisterly concern, and efficient and prompt service, which made the transactions with the University Departments smooth and expeditious. I also recall with happiness and gratitude, the services of Mr Murthy and Ms Lilly.
I am immensely indebted to the doctoral study circle under Prof. Dr Felix, which proved a testing ground for many of my ideas. I had the privilege of being a member of this study circle for long, deriving benefit from its fruitful interactions, and the necessary discipline it demanded, by way of time-bound progress in research, and acquisition of clarity in communication and writing styles. I recall with delight the contributions of the participants, Dr Chinnappa, Dr Maria David, Dr Maria Arul Raj, Dr G. Patrick, Dr George Thadathil, V. Arul Raj, Pushpa Joseph and Vinitha Manjula. I am also indebted to Lawrence Fernandes, James Ponniah, Francis Gonsalves, Mary John, Anthony Sebastian, L. Michael, F. Kulandaisamy, Shalini Thomas, A. Metty and Prem.

My friendship and association with Dr Ananta Kumar Giri of Madras Institute of Development Studies, has greatly enriched my person, as well as my research endeavour. I am grateful to Ananta for broadening the vistas and deepening the contours of my research, from many disciplinary angles.

I am also grateful to Sanal Mohan of the Centre for the Studies in Social Sciences, Kolkata, for the keen interest, he has shown in the progress of my research, and making available to me relevant material from time to time. Dr Shasheej Hegde of the Central University of Hyderabad drew my attention to the need of giving space to the dynamics of the ‘encounter’, as a necessary component of the thesis. I am also grateful to him for a very exhaustive and extended bibliography in works of sociology, he was gracious enough to provide me with.

I place on record my immense gratitude to Dr Sophy Philippose for enlightening me on the possible impact of social stigma, on the striving for autonomy by persons and groups on the margins. She has also gone the extra mile in providing me with other pertinent material from the domain of clinical psychology.

I owe a debt of gratitude to late Prof. Dr Janardhanan Rao, Department of Public Administration, Kakatiya University, who introduced me to Dr G.N. Rao of Centre for Development Studies, Thiruvananthapuram. Dr G. N. Rao, through his insights, arising out of his pioneering studies in the economic history of Krishna - Godavari Delta, has made a definitive contribution to this thesis, from the slant of political economy. He also gave me research leads in the institutions affiliated to Andhra University, Visakhapatnam.

I am grateful to Dr. Ratanam of Agro-economic Research Centre, Andhra University, who made available to me the research and project papers of the Centre, especially those pertaining to East Godavari. I am indebted to Prof Vijay Prakash and Dr K. E. Rajapramukh of the Department of Anthropology, Andhra University, who were generous enough to share their resource material with me. Dr George Victor, of the Department of Philosophy, Andhra University provided me with a wealth of information on the Madiga life world and worldview.

I am deeply indebted to Prof. Viswanatha Reddy of the Department of Telugu, Andhra University, who has gone out of his way, to see to the transliteration of the entire thesis, at the cost of considerable time and effort.

I also place on record my gratitude to Prof. Bittu Venketeswarlu of Telugu University, Hyderabad for making available to me the edited version of the Lumbapranam. So too, I am deeply indebted to Dr Yendluri Sudhakar, Telugu University, Rajamundhry, for making available to me his own works pertaining to Madiga life and ethos and other literature in Telugu on the Madigas and the Dalits. I am indebted to Dr Sudhakar Reddy of Centre for Folk Culture Studies, University of Hyderabad, who was kind enough to provide me with relevant bibliography on colonialism and culture, and Telugu texts of folk dramas performed by the Madigas.

I am grateful to the authorities of the State Archives of Tamilnadu at Egmore, Chennai and Dr Sundaranarajan, the research director of the Archives for his availability. I am also indebted to the library staff of Madras Institute of development Studies, Adyar, Chennai, and to the library staff of Konnemara public library, Chennai. I express my gratitude to the authorities and the library staff of the State Archives of Andhra Pradesh, Tarnaka, Hyderabad and the branch of the State Archives of Andhra Pradesh at Rajamundhry. I extend my thanks to the library staff of the Telugu University, Osmania University campus, Hyderabad. In all these institutions, I have spent a considerable time in research and the approachability and availability of the staff had made my work easier.
I am also indebted to Rev. Fr. P.V. Joseph, the former director of Don Bosco Cultural Centre at Mawlan, Shillong, who made available to me the latest books in the interdisciplinary domain of developmental anthropology. The excellent library of North Eastern Hill University (NEHU), Shillong is another place, where I did research with delight and fruitfulness. I am also indebted to the staff of the Regional Institute of Anthropology, Shillong for giving me access to their library.

I gratefully cherish the warmth and hospitality showered on me by Tomichan and Maggie, my friends, during my research sojourn at their home, across the NEHU library.

I have very warm sentiments towards the South Indian Salesian Province of Chennai, which hosted me during my year of M.Phil. Studies, as well as during my doctoral research. I extend my sincere gratitude to the province, and its present provincial V. Rev. Fr. Bellarmine Fernando and its former provincial, Rev. Fr. Camillus Fernando. In a very special way, I place on record my heartfelt gratitude to the Salesian community of Refuge, Broadway, which provided me a home, and allowed me time, space and freedom to pursue my research, unhampered. I am affectionately grateful to the community, to all the confreres, past and present, especially the former Rector, Rt. Rev. Dr. Joseph Anthony, and the present Rector, Rev. Fr. Susai Lourdusamy for their care and concern.

I am grateful to Rev. Fr. T.D. John and the Salesian community of Kaupapuram, Warangal for extending support and help, at crucial turns in the research. So too I extend my heartfelt gratitude to Rev. Fr. K.K. Joseph and the Salesian community of Ravulapalem, for having accepted me as a member of their community, whenever I found myself in East Godavari for field research. At the final moments of the research, I felt strengthened by the support of Fr Mathew C.J., the Rector of St John’s Regional seminary, Kondadaba, and the other members of the community, especially Rev Fr Balashowry. In a very special way, I am grateful to Joshtrom, my friend and former Principal, at Don Bosco Vishwa Jyothi College, Karunapuram, and to Rev. Fr. M. Anthony, my colleague at St Xavier’s seminary, for their warmth and support during my field research.
Without the support extended by PARA (People’s Action for Rural Awakening) of Ravulapalem, this research would not have reached its speedy completion. I am immensely grateful to Rev Fr Thomas Pullithinanam, the Director of PARA, and the staff members, especially Mr Suyaranarayana, for all their help, at various levels and stages of the five-year research period.

I owe a debt of gratitude to all the parish priests of Konaseema, especially Rev. Fr Babu George, Rev. Fr Joseph Arjun, Rev. Fr Mathew Kunnumpuram, Rev. Fr Joseph Oliaiparam, Rev. Fr Arulappa and Rev. Fr Vara John. They have gone out of their way, to help me with the work of the research. In a special way, I place on record my gratitude to Rev. Fr Rayappa, the co-ordinator for APSS in Konaseema, and his staff, for providing me with relevant data at short notice. I also recall with gratitude the help given to me by catechists Satyanadam, Abraham, Venkata Rao and Babuji. I am indebted to Mr Pethiraj of Kommaragiri parish, for having played the role of research assistant, during my stay at Island Polavaram.

I am deeply indebted to Ms Rebecca of Swiss India Project, Hyderabad for introducing me to the concept of “Rural Livelihood Systems”, as a potential interpretative key, in sifting and interpreting data from the field. I am also grateful to her for assisting me in the preparation of the schedule of questions for the interviews.

I will be failing in my duty if I do not place on record the hard and dedicated work, put in by Mr Prabhakar of Vishwa Jyothi College, Karunapuram, who at critical stages of the research came to my assistance. I am also grateful to Mr Bhaskar, who acted as assistant to Mr Prabhakar. I extend my thanks to Rev Bro. Vincent Castellino, Rev Bro Pitchaimuthu Aruldoss and a team of Brothers, who helped me with the processing of research data. I extend my gratitude to Mr Sai Ram of St John’s Regional Seminary, Kondadaha for helping me with the transliteration of parts of the thesis.

I am grateful to Dr G. Patrick, post-doctoral research fellow of the Department of Christian Studies, who came to my assistance at the final stages of the preparation of the thesis, by providing me with the apt computer package for the transliteration of the manuscript. He was also kind enough to read the manuscript and offer very insightful comments. James Ponniah’s timely help and friendly support, in reading the entire thesis at short notice and offering very valuable and critical comments is gratefully acknowledged. My thanks are also due to Mary John, who, with his characteristic meticulousness, read through parts of the thesis and the entire bibliography, and offered methodological corrections. I am grateful to Francis Gonsalves, who was kind enough to offer his considered and critical comments on the concluding portion of the thesis, related to theology.

The many stimulating interactions with Shalini, on the thematic of political economy, economic sacred and primordial theology, from the angle of gendered nature of economy and economy as care, have been woven into the feminine strands and texture of this thesis. I express my deepest gratitude to Shalini also for her care, concern, affirmation and support, especially during the final stages of the thesis.

I am also appreciative of the care and support of John and Sophy, Kevin and Sony, all through my sojourn in Chennai and especially during the final stages of the preparation of the thesis.

In a very special way, I am thankful to Ms Usha Balakrishnan of Oxford University Publications, Chennai, who was always kept me informed of the latest publications, thus helping me keep my reading and bibliography up to date.

Last, but not the least, I extend my heartfelt gratitude to Ms Yakna Prabha of Adyar Students Xerox, Paris, Chennai, for the painstaking revision of the manuscript thrice over, and for the final editing, which she has accomplished with finesse and grace. I am also grateful to the other members on the staff of the Students Xerox, for the fine and speedy job they turned out, in the production of the final text.

Many others, whose names do not find mention here, have also contributed to my reaching this stage of completing my thesis. I am grateful to each and every one of them.
