ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Writing this doctoral thesis has been to me a unique intellectual pilgrimage on the road less travelled, embodying the coalescence of incessant philosophical soliloquy and spiritual solitude on the one hand and that of engaged asceticism and soul-nourishing conversation and affection on the other. In a very important sense it has been the incarnation of kenosis and kairos, of agápē and advaita, of agony and ecstasy, in my intellectual life. And many a person has been my co-pilgrims in this sojourn and I want to thank them. First and foremost I thank Professor Vibha Chaturvedi, my thesis-supervisor, for guiding me in this work. In wrestling with the ideas and the arguments presented in this work, she has constantly and consistently nurtured and nourished my intellectual space in which I could be an itinerant inquirer. This enabled me to identify the ideas and concepts that teased and tormented, baffled and agitated my inquisitive mind; and in a contemplative silence I came to realize that these very ideas and concepts satiated and quenched my philosophical thirst. As the ideas continued to take a definite shape and consequently the structuring of arguments blossomed, she challenged me to be clear in my thinking and to be penetrative in my argumentation. And
I remain deeply indebted to her for her guidance and compassionate understanding.

I remain grateful to those persons who have been deeply connected with my philosophical voyage, as well as the original conception cum final blossoming of this doctoral thesis. I remember with gratitude particularly Prof. Thomas O’ Brien of St. Joseph’s College, London, who inculcated in me a deep interest in philosophy; the late Prof. K. N. Mishra and Prof. R. R. Pandey of Banaras Hindu University, Varanasi, for having helped me to engage with the Indic philosophical traditions; the late Prof. George M. Soares Prabhu of De Nobili College, Pune, for teaching me the intimate connection between word and deed in philosophy as well as in theology; the late Prof. Raimon Panikkar for teaching me the inter-cultural challenge in doing philosophy and theology; and the late Prof. Ramchandra Gandhi, the unparalleled philosophical hermit, who taught me and showed me the passionate beauty of philosophical practice as the ‘art of thinking about thinking’. Significantly many others helped me to critique my own ideas by inviting me to present papers in seminars, workshops and conferences. And I want to thank them all, very specially, Prof. V. C. Thomas of Pondicherry University, Dr. Manidipa Sen of Jawaharlal Nehru University, Dr. Johnson Puthenpurackal of Vijnana
Nilayam College / ACPI, Eluru and Dr. George Panthanmackal of Suvidya College, Bangalore. I also wish to express my thanks to my colleagues and friends who showed keen interest in the progress of this research work, specially, Prof. H. S. Prasad, the Head of the Department of Philosophy, University of Delhi; Prof. George Gispert-Sauch, SJ of the Vidyajyoti College of Theology, Delhi; Shankar Ramaswamy of the Department of Anthropology, University of Chicago; Dr Shiny Pulickakkunnel of the Department of Mathematics, Allahabad Agricultural Institute (Deemed University), Allahabad; and Dr Rekha Basu of the Department of Philosophy, Hindu College, University of Delhi. I remember with gratitude Prof. Vinay Kumar Srivastava, the Principal of Hindu College, University of Delhi, for encouraging me in my academic pursuits. I also remember with gratitude, the late Rev. Gaspar A. Pinto and the late Msgr. Jose Fernandez whose untiring efforts made it possible for me to come to Banaras, the city of ‘burning and learning’, to begin my intellectual journey many years ago. I thank my students at Varanasi and Delhi, especially those of Hindu College, for teaching me not to rest on the laurels of received ideas and opinions, but rather to engage in incessant search and questioning. I remain grateful to the library staff of the Delhi University Library System, the Central Reference Library, the Hindu College Library, the Vidyajyoti College
Library, the Max-Mueller Bhavan Library, and the Sahitya Akademi Library for their kind assistance. Last but not the least, I remain indebted to my parents, my sister and brothers, well-wishers and friends who supported me incessantly with their care, prayer and blessings.
