ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to acknowledge with gratitude and pleasure the guidance received from my supervisor Professor T. Nageswara Rao without whose critical insights, thought-provoking comments and encouragement this work would not have been possible.

I sincerely thank my teachers in the Department, Prof. R. Ramachandra, Prof. B.K. Banker, Prof. K.C. Belliappa, Prof. K.T. Sunitha, Prof. Mahadeva, Mr. M.H. Rudramuni, Dr. T. Subramanyan, Ms Devika Rani, and Prof. P.H. Padma for their support and interest in my work. Prof. K.T. Sunitha and Prof. K. Byrappa (Department of Geology, University of Mysore) have been a constant source of inspiration and encouragement in my academic endeavours. I am thankful to them.

I am grateful especially to the International Council for Canadian Studies (ICCS), Ottawa, Canada, for their award of Canadian Commonwealth Scholarship (Oct 2000 to Apr 2002), in collaboration with the Ministry of Human Resource Development, Govt. of India, New Delhi. The one and a half years I spent at McGill University as a Visiting Research Student have proved crucial in ways far too numerous to mention here. I am grateful to the Graduate Faculty at the Department of English for treating me as one among them and for not only enabling me to have discussion with all the Professors, Research Scholars and Graduate students but also for granting access to libraries and archives, in and around McGill. I cannot thank enough Prof. Dorothy Bray, then Director of Graduate Studies in English, for her tremendous support as my academic advisor; Prof. Maggie Kilgour, then Chair, Department of English, for her encouragement; Prof. Max Dorsinville for being an excellent instructor for my graduate course on Postcolonial Fiction and for offering insights into my research work; Prof. Berkley Kaite for sparing her precious time for discussion on semiotics; Prof. Alan Hepburn for being kind enough to offer his suggestions on modern theory and criticism; Prof. David Williams and Prof. Robert Lecker for their enthusiastic responses to and suggestions on my research subject. Prof. Brian Trehearne, in addition to being my instructor for the graduate course on Canadian Literature, gladly agreed to be my informal supervisor. I am grateful to him for a number of valuable discussions on my research methodology and its applicability, and for his diligent comments on my prose style. I am immensely indebted to Prof. Nathalie Cooke who was also my informal supervisor, a thought provoking teacher and critic, and a generous friend. She offered excellent critical insights during our many discussions and conversations, and always inspired me in the advancement of my research on Callaghan.

My friends Lorna Hutchison, Dr. Marie Thérèse Blanc, Dr. Wendy Roy, Liisa Stephenson, Colin Hill, Shelly Boyd, Medrie Purdham and Jennifer Koopman, despite their own pressing needs as Research Scholars in the Department, were always helpful, both in academic and personal matters. I am grateful to them, for I would not have learnt many things and would not have been so comfortable living in Canada without their affection and kindness.

I am grateful to Dr. Wendy Roy, for proofreading a part of my thesis and offering her valuable suggestions.

My special thanks go to my friends Abhaya N.B., Dr. Venkatesh P., Sree keerthy, Krishnamurthy, Dr. Naomita Dalal, Dr. Lolakshi, Dr. Ramachandra, Arundathi B. Sridhar, Dr. Vijayanand Guddera, and Dr. Seetha who have not only shared my anxieties but have also offered their enormous support and suggestions. I also thank Ms Prema for her constant enquiries and concern for my research work.

I am indebted to my friend Prakash N.N. for his tremendous support, encouragement and understanding whenever it was difficult to go on with my work.

It is not possible to thank my parents and brothers adequately for their unwavering confidence in my ability and for their constant encouragement in all my endeavours. I will be ever grateful to all that they have given me.
