Chapter 3

3. Chapter Scheme:
The study will follow following scheme of chapterisation.

Chapter 1: Introduction
The introductory chapter would explain the basic concepts of the study like perspective, and partially explain why people participate and why it is important in decentralized set up. It will also look at theoretical concepts of participation and power.

Chapter 2: Research Methodology
This chapter would deal with problem definition, research design, sampling technique, data collection and statistical tools used for data analysis.
The data from Delhi and Mysore have been collected for this research purpose. In this chapter issues related to urban governance, participation through the sampling of these two local bodies, resident welfare association and bureaucracy has been taken.

Chapter 3: Chapter Scheme

Chapter 4: Review of Literature
This chapter would deal with literature review related to study.

Chapter 5: History of Urban Governance
This chapter would deal with process of urban development vis-à-vis five-year plans and changes brought in by them. India with its unique brush with traditional and modernity has to cope up a large number of issues in urban governance. The history of urban governance along with impact of 74th Amendment would be also analyzed in this chapter.
Chapter 6: Profile of Two Cities
This chapter would highlight the pattern of urban governance in Delhi and Mysore – two very different cities. One is the national capital and the second is the fast growing Urban Center. The Chapter would also study the Bhagidari system in Delhi which has been focal point in discussion and reference as a model of citizen’s participation in governance.

Chapter 7: Data Analysis
This chapter would deal with the various statistical tools used to analysis the data.

Chapter 8: Hypothesis Testing and Major Findings
This chapter would deal with the major findings related to decentralized urban governance with respect to the stake holders (politicians, bureaucrats and citizens) for Delhi and Mysore city. It is revealed here that the local bodies reflect the socio-political-economic malice in which they are located. The local political structure are built in such a way that they do not foster mobilization and articulation by people as a process of decentralization.

Chapter 9: Proposed Model and Conclusions
This chapter would suggest and include both summary of work and alternatives. It would also provide long term suggestions to address inclusion of people in democratic decision making process.
