ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

This Ph. D dissertation is the result of cooperation and healthy assistance of many personalities and organisations inside and outside Barak Valley. Their number is too large and help rendered is too diverse that defy adequate acknowledgement. Nevertheless, some cannot go unmentioned here.

To begin with, I express my deep sense of gratitude to my research guide Dr. Keya Sen Gupta, Head, Department of Economics, Assam University, Silchar for the academic guidance and support that she has given me time to time while pursuing my doctoral research. I am deeply indebted to her for her valuable suggestions and constructive criticism which helped in the timely completion of this work. The present work would not have been possible without her help and advice offered at different stages of my work.

I do not know how to express my deep appreciation to Dr. Apurbananda Mazumdar, Reader, Department of Commerce, who has specially inspired me to undertake the present doctoral research project.

The affection and encouragement which I received from my 'Ma' and elder brothers during the course of my studies has always been of immense help to me throughout my career. And, of course, I can not forget to thank my sister-in-laws too.

I am indebted to my father and mother-in-law who not only showed great patience but also inspired me in this academic pursuit. I lack words and manners for expressing my gratitude and feeling of appreciation for my husband Mr. Prasanta Kr. Roy for his sustained encouragement, support and joyful company throughout the course of this work.

I express my heartfelt gratitude to various persons whose suggestions and discussion has been of immense help in the course of my work – Dr. Malini Karkal of International Institute of Population Science, Bombay, Dr. Arup Maharatna of Burdwan University, West Bengal, Dr. Dilip Nath of Gauhati University, Dr. P.R. Bhattacharjee of Assam University, Silchar, Dr. A.B. Deb of Cachar College, Pravangshu Dutta of N.C. College, Badarpur.
My sincere thanks are due to various Government Offices such as Office of the Registrar General, Census Office, Central Statistical Organisation, Ministry of Human Resource and Development, Delhi, Directorate of Economics and Statistics, Silchar, Hailakandi and Karimganj and also to libraries of different academic institutions like J.N.U, Institute of Economic Growth, ICSSR, Centre for Women Development Studies, National Social Science Documentation Centre at Delhi, International Institute of Population Science, Bombay, Institute of Social and Economic change, Bangalore, Indian Statistical Institute, Women's Studies Centre, Centre for Studies in Social Science at Calcutta Women's Studies Centre, Population Research Centre, Omeo Kr. Das Institute of Social Change and Development at Guwahati, NEHU, ICSSR at Shillong and Assam University, Silchar who gladly allow me to examine their official records, books and other materials related to my work.

I am also grateful to UGC because of the assistance provided by them in terms of financial grants.

I feel indebted to the respondents belonging to Barak Valley who rendered useful help and cooperation in data collection. In this regard, I express my sincere thanks to Subhradi, Rupa, Shilpi, Mahul, Ela, Babli and Sanghamitra.

At the end, I wish to acknowledge with thanks the sincere efforts of Mr. Prasenjit Nath who typed the manuscript and arranged the printing of the thesis.

Place: Silchar

Date: September 5, 2003

Paramita Das

(Paramita Das)