A Note on Diacritical Marks for Non-English words

Use of diacritical marks has been avoided in the thesis. The reason is that the parties to the controversies, we are considering, have not used them. And as we are taking their views, profusely in their own words, often quoting them, our use of the same words with diacritical marks, and the quoting of their words used by them without diacritical marks, may present an inconsistent approach. However, care has been taken for underlining the non-English words.

Also it may be noted that the references are all given at the end of the thesis for the sake of convenience in typing, since this also is an accepted form, instead of foot-notes.
