ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I am very much thankful to Dr. M. A. Adhoni for his continuous guidance and encouragement. He read the successive drafts of present work and gave valuable suggestions for improvement.

The idea of working on the expenditure tax was suggested by Professor (Late) Uzheeduddin Khan of the Administrative Staff College of India, Hyderabad. I had very lengthy discussions with him particularly on topics relating to the impact of this tax on economic variables.

The U.S. Department of Treasury and Office of Tax Policy Analysis, Washington D.C., supplied sufficient material on this tax and other published reports of the Department. Professor David Bradford, the principal author of 'Blueprints for Basic Tax Reform' and presently with Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs, Princeton University, N.J., suggested readings and supplied copies of his published papers. The publication department of World Bank provided related readings. I thank them all.

I take this opportunity to thank librarians of Karnataka University, National Institute of Public Finance and Policy, New Delhi and Centro for Economic and Social Studies, Hyderabad.
