CONTENTS.

CHAPTER I - "Introduction"

Mandana - Suresvara equation - The salient features of Suresvara's Contribution - The theory of Avidyā as Avicārita Siddha and no Anirvacanīya is a large digression — another point is to say that Avidyā rests on both the supreme self and personal self place of Kāraṇa Āśrī leading to Citta Siddhi. The bearing of these points on the equation.

Works of Suresvara and their authorship - Pancikaranavartika, Manasollasa; Kāśmirī- mokṣavācara;

Language of Suresvara an observation -

CHAPTER II - "The Self"

Abhasa theory; introductory remarks
Discussion of Schools of Vivaranacārya and Vācaspati in the matter of world causation - The intermediary position of other exponents The exposition of Vivārta and Parinama Vadas

Abhasa theory explained and discussed. The status of Avidyā in this theory - Avidyā is not an Abhasa - The need for assumption of Avidyā Relationship of Abhasa to Avidyā -
The conception Avicāritaśiddha discussed the conceptions of Existence and Reality with reference to Avidyā - The Avicārita Siddha versus Anirvacanīya Conceptions - The views of Madhusūdana Sarasvatī discussed - The Anirvacanīyata is only in the effects - Views of Saṅkara explained -

The relationship between Avidyā and Brahman - The locus and object of Avidyā - The position of Brahman, Jīva and Universe in this regard -

The conception of Śaṅkara discussed inter alia - Views of Vidyārāṇya and other exponents discussed - The contribution of Suresvara in this matter - Kūstātha is no Śaṅkara but only Īśvara and Jīva - difference between the Sāksitva of both - the variability of Suresvara's views - The parallel thought in Western Philosophy compared.

The discussion on the locus of Avidyā continued - The immediate of Realisation of Brahman as one of the reasons - The views of Vivāraṇa and Vacāspatī discussed and compared.
The apparently conflicting natures of Avidyā from two different stand points; Vāstu Vṛttta and Tamāvṛttta - The mutual relation of Avidyā and its effect on one hand and Brahman and Jīva on the other Conclusion; two stages in the evolution - Universal and personal Jīvas.

CHAPTER III - "The Universe" 78 to 113

Introductory remarks - Evolution of Physical world starts from Īśvara stage.

Distribution between Avidyā, Māyā and Ajñāna. The two types of Avidyā referred to by other exponents is single but by functional Avidyā only - Gradations in Avidyā -

Causality of the universe - the material cause of the Universe according to Suresvara is Brahman only - Examination of Praveda Sutrīs - School of Vivāraṇa and Vācaspati with regards to the causality discussed - The limits of Vivāraṇa and Upādāna causality according to Suresvara - views of Saṅkara compared - contemporary Western Philosophy compared -

Evolution of Īśvara, Sutrātman śIranya Garbha and Virāt - The nine Preliminary stages enunciated by Ramâdvâya Corelated to the views of Western Philosophy - Sûtrâtman is a stage prior to Hiranyagarbha - The stages of Hiranyagarbha and Virat -

The place Pancâkarana and Trîvrtkârana in the evolution of world - Suresvara's preference to the latter due to scriptural sanction -

CHAPTER IV - "The Supreme"

Introductory - The need to define the Supreme and inadequacy of means to do so

The triple principles of existence Sat, Cit and Ânanda not separate constituencies - but they emerge in experience in the order Sat as one with multiplicity and yet different from it - This conception denotes the immediacy all pervasive nature, and supreme bliss of Brahman - The part of Âvidyâ in concealing the Supreme inspite of the latter's immediacy - The how of immediacy from the angle of the Supreme - The immediacy is not for the sake of Âvidyâ and its modifications. The Cit emerging as an aspect of Sat and this is needed for the realisation of personal self too - The place of Cit in external and internal cognitions - This aspect of Sat as beyond limits of space and time —

The three stages of consciousness examined from this angle — The Śāksitva from Kītastha to Jīva levels is due to this aspect of Cit.
The Kītastha stage as the prefinal one for Realisation — The view of Vidyāranya compared
The need for accepting two levels of Realisation

The Bhāvādvaita view examined — It is not for from the theory of latter Advaitins —
The distinction between this theory and the conception of Suresvara expounded—Bhāvādvaśita stops with Kītastha stage and Neo-Advaitins go beyond —

CHAPTER V — "The Discipline — II"

Introduction — Liberation is the goal for all systems of Indian Philosophy but they differ in means — The place of religious activity and difference of opinion as to its usefulness in leading to liberation
The Upanisadic way analysed — The basis for this is the theory of transmigration of Soul —

The Āpurva of Mīmāṃsa is based on the unseen potency of the Soul in the process of transmigration — The view of Buddhism examined in this context —
The views of Prābhākaras and Bhāttas with regards to different types of Kārmas as leading to Liberation - the place of potency in Self - The Schools that combine Jñāna and Kārma as means for liberation Views of Mandana and Bhartṛprapānta analysed - The views of Vidyaranya and Vācaspati explained

Suresvara’s arguments against the theory of Kārma leading to Liberation - Views of Purvamāṃsā School attacked.

Conclusion - Suresvara’s views examined from certain philosophical and practical view points - Comparison with Buddhistic and Māṃsāsa means to liberation - Knit’s pure reason and practical reason compared - Place of Bhāvavāda School in Suresvara’s thought - ‘His is a way more offense than diffence.’

CHAPTER VI - "The Discipline - II"

Introduction - The positive way of Suresvara to Liberation -

The method of interpretation of sentence of pseudo injunction - Suresvara’s digression from Saṅkṣastra - Two instances discussed and compared with the views of Mandana and Bhartṛprapānta -
The four requisites for a Vividisa Samnyāsin according to Śaṅkara and Suresvara's divergence in the matter of their definition and place in Śādhanā - The sense of injunction and its nature with reference to Śravana, Manana and Nidhiṅhyāsana - The place Suresvara allots to these three in Advaitic discipline -

The two types of Samnyāsa - Vividisa Samnyāsa is an essential discipline - Its nature and definition; divergence of Suresvara from Śaṅkara - Eligibility of non-brahmins to Samnyāsa -

Presentation of Supreme reality by Mahāvākyā - Various methods - Suresvara's preference to Laksanā and also implied Vācaka

The conception of Jīvanmuktā and its difference from Mukta - Correlation of Microcosmic and macrocosmic levels -

Conclusion - The mukta and his nature.

NOTES AND REFERENCES

BIBLIOGRAPHY