ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

In the long journey a few people I would like to thank are:

- Prof. G. Ram (Supervisor), Department of Sociology, Assam University, for his thought provoking discussions, understanding and encouragement at every stage of my research and documentation. To him I owe a lot more than this study.

- Prof. N. Sudhakar Rao (Co-Supervisor), Department of Anthropology, University of Hyderabad, my teacher to whom I place on record my deep sense of gratitude for continuous and painstaking guidance and help that has manifested in the present form of thesis.

- Anjan Purkayastha, Senior Chemist, TRA for his pertinent help.

- Prativa Purkayastha, my mother, who was the chief motivator getting me involved into the work.

- Sumana for helping me through out the study; in editing, drawing and discussions; and a memorable friendship ........... everything, and more.

- Amal for being yourself, among other things.

- Moti and Subhasish for the travels, photography and all the good times, - we went along a long way.

- Kaustav and Prasanta for the motivation, discussions and the dinners.

- Bapon for the drivers, and making it all seem so possible.

- Mohendra’s family for love and affection.

- Supratim for typing, formatting and being a good guy.

- The three each traditional fishing communities of the Shonebeel and the Barak river villages for being what they are.

- My mother, brothers, sisters, father-in-law, mother-in-law, my daughter – Anwesha and the rest of the family members for love, patience and trust in me. This thesis is for you all.

- And finally to my wife, Sumana toughest critic, for all arguments – your love and support has always meant a lot for me.

Assam University
19th March 2009

(Debasish Purkayastha)