Acknowledgements

This study of the novels of Toni Morrison, the most prominent African American novelist today, and the winner of the Nobel Prize in Literature in 1993, was inspired by my reading of American literature and Postcolonial literature, while pursuing the course for the degree of Master of Arts in Assam University, Silchar. I am grateful to my teachers in the Department of English, particularly my supervisor, Dr. Dipankar Purkayastha, Dr. Mala Renganathan, Dr. Afeefa Banu, and Prof. Subhash Chandra Saha, now Vice Chancellor of Assam University. I am also grateful to Prof. Tapodhir Bhattacharjee, Dean, School of Languages, Assam University, Dr. Subir Kar and Dr. Rama Bhattacharyya, of the Department of Bengali, for their constant encouragement.

I am especially indebted to my parents, particularly my mother, Smti Anima Roy, for her constant support and encouragement. As I write these words, I painfully miss my father, Late Chitta Ranjan Roy, who passed away in 2004, as I was half-way through my work.
