The fundamentals of Labour Law were taught to me by Prof G V. AJJAPPA when I studied for the LL M Degree at the Department of Studies in Law, Karnatak University, Dharwad. Later, when I was his colleague at the said Department and shared the teaching of Labour Law with him, he had no hesitation whatsoever, to agree to my request that he should guide me through the Ph D research programme. From then onwards, it has been a long process of education and learning under his amiable guidance, care and scrutiny. He has taken many days off to make himself available for discussion on everything that was written with regard to this research work. Apart from exacting work of high quality, he showed tremendous patience coupled with affection to ensure that this Project undertaken came to its fruitful end. To a person of these rare qualities I bow my head in deep and heartfelt gratitude.

The Library of University Law College, Dharwad, has been the source and inspiration for embarking upon this research work. But then, all the books and material would be of no consequence but for the presence of Sri Vishwanath Kotre. Apart from making to us available the up-to-date material, he has been an extremely kind friend giving all the encouragement necessary for the completion of this work.
Further, with the able support of Sri Sannakki (Stenographer) it was very easy to get the maximum out of the source material available in the Library.

I wish to thank all my other Colleagues at the University Law College, Dharwad and the University Law College, Bangalore, for the encouragement they gave me to pursue this research work.

I also wish to thank the Librarian and the other Staff working at the Labour Library, Ministry of Labour, Shramshakti Bhavan, New Delhi, and the Staff working at the Sri Ram Centre of Industrial Relations, New Delhi, for all the assistance provided in collecting material for this work.

Finally, I wish to thank all those who have helped me at Karnatak University, Dharwad, to enable me to complete this work.
