ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

There is a revival of interest in the study of colonial literature. The revival is probably due to two reasons: first, the curiosity to peep into the colonial psyche, and secondly to correct the distortion if any. Dr. M.K.Naik's book, Mirror on the Wall, kindled the interest in me about the Anglo-Indian writing. I had an occasion to call on him on a courtesy visit in Pune, where he had settled after his retirement. He was my teacher earlier during my student days in Dharwad. As a teacher he had inspired me a lot and, there was a natural curiosity to meet him and spend some time with him. It was on this occasion that Dr. Naik suggested that I should take up a study on John Masters. The result of that suggestion is this work. I owe my deep sense of gratitude to him for his inspiration and knowledgeable advice. But for his encouragement, I am afraid, I could not have ventured into this seemingly dark area where collecting of secondary source information is very difficult leave alone procuring of primary source books.

My gratitude is also due to Dr. G.A. Giraddiyavar, Professor, Department of English, Karnataka University, Dharwad for his guidance. He never lost his cool even when my progress was limping due to some unavoidable problems. His constant words of encouragement in a friendly manner restored a sense of confidence in me.

A research work of any kind, needs moral as well as material support from all the corners. My father has been a constant source of moral inspiration to me. The narration of his colonial experiences, that too with a nostalgic rumination, provided me with a lot of insights that helped me in my studies. I had a moral obligation to fulfil his dream.
The support also came from my own family members and well wishers. The list could be too long to read but still, to name only a few, there are friends like Dr. Mallesh Hullamani, Dr. C.G.Mathad, Dr. V.B.Mathad, Shri H.G. Shivananda Murthy, Dr. B.S.Naiker, Dr. C.R. Yaravintalimath, Prof. B.J.Kumbar, Dr. B.Y.Patil etc.

The material support by way of notes, secondary source material etc., has come from so many friends and student friends too. Chiefly among them are:

1. Dr. K.C.Belliappa, Mysore University,
2. Dr. Pramod Nayar, Central University, Hyderabad,
3. Dr. C.S.Nanjundaiah, Shimoga,
4. Dr. V.P.Vaidya, Kuvempu University,
5. Mr. K.N.Yedunandan (US),

I have collected the sources from the libraries in the following places and I am grateful to the people and officials who extended the help to me:

1. Karnataka University, Dharwad.
2. City Central Library, Hubli and Dharwad.
3. Sahyadri Science College, Shimoga.
4. Kuvempu University, Shimoga.
5. Pune University.
6. Punjab University, Amritsar.

Besides, old book shops like New and Secondhand Book shop in Bombay, Select Book shop in Bangalore, shopkeepers on the pavements, specially in Bombay, have helped me to a great extent in finding materials. I shall be failing in my duty if I do not acknowledge their contribution.

- Basavaraj C. Patil