ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I owe my gratitude to many persons, who have contributed and accompanied me on this enriching journey of research which has come to a fruitful end, in the form of this thesis.

I express my heartfelt gratitude to my charismatic and scholarly guide, Dr. P. S. Hatyal, Professor of Psychology (Retd.), Karnataka University, Dharwad, for his cooperation and whole-hearted support. His undying zest for life and stamina would put many a sportsperson to shame. He is the ideal example of what can lie ahead when one ages gracefully and successfully.

I am indebted to the authorities of Karnataka University authorities for granting me the permission to carry out the research work.

I am thankful to the Chairperson, and Teaching Faculty, as well as, the very able office staff, at the Department of Psychology, Karnataka University, Dharwad, for having extended all the facilities and encouragement to pursue this research.

I owe my special thanks to the Centre for Research in Ageing, S. V. University, Tirupati. One of the best experiences of my research was to meet and share views with the very eminent and humble Dr. P. V. Ramamurti, who has initiated the field of Gerontology in India. It was also my pleasure to meet Dr. Januna D., and Dr. Lakitha K., who extended their support and hospitality while allowing access to all the library facilities at the S. V. University.

My thanks are due also to the authorities and staff of the libraries at Mumbai University, Goa University, Goa Institute of Nursing Education, Goa Medical College, St. Xaviers College and Rosary College at Goa and Goa Institute of Management. Also
I am touched by the promptness shown to me by persons outside India, through internet contacts, by way of sending relevant literature, whenever requested.

I extend my sincere thanks to my Principal and colleagues of my college, St. Xavier’s College, Mapusa, for the support and interest shown to my research efforts.

I wish to thank specially Melita Dsouza and Clarence Rodrigues, who helped in my work, making it easier for me, and Statistians Dr. Kulkarni, Dr. Nair and Dr. M. V. Maddapur, Professor of Statistics (Rtd.), Karnatak University, Dharwad, for guiding me in the Statistical Analysis.

A very special thanks is due to Dr. V. S. Yadav, from the University of Agricultural Sciences, Dharwad, for having gone through and offering valuable suggestions towards my research work.

My gratitude to my parents, my husband and children, and my siblings for their constant help and moral support, that helped me stay focused and on track to completing my research work.

Lastly, but not the least, my sincere thanks and gratitude to all my senior citizen subjects, who are the foundation and inspiration to this research. They have taught me that wisdom, fulfillment and success in life come from the right attitude towards growing old with grace, by being active and never saying die.
