Acknowledgement

The problem of poverty is one of the most important core issues concerning developing countries like India. The present thesis has come up with some empirical contributions taking into consideration various relevant aspects of current poverty dynamics in the context of both national and state levels of our country. It has applied some new econometric and time series techniques to the poverty, growth and inequality for policy formulation by making use of the advanced methods alongside the exiting econometric and time series methods.

It is my great pleasure to submit this thesis at the department of statistics of University of Kalyani with which I am involved from the very beginning of studying statistics. It is also a crucial time for me to express my gratitude to the persons I had the privilege to be associated with during the course of my work. This thesis owes much to their unstinting help and generosity.

At first, I express my deep respect and gratitude to Dr. Tushar K. Mitra, Ex-professor, Department of Statistics, University of Kalyani not only for his erudition but also for his proper and encouraging guidance which would always inspired me. I have a debt of gratitude to Dr. Samarjit Das of Indian Statistical Institute and Dr. Sisir K. Samanta of University of Kalyani for their proper guidance and valuable help on various issues of my thesis.

I reserve my deepest gratitude for this department of Statistics, University of Kalyani, the alma mater of my grown-up years, that has not only put me on my mettle with its exacting academic standards but has provided me with a whole some nourishment as well. I extend my sincere thanks to all the professors or academicians of the department. I also thank the official members who always would help me during my research period. I must also mention that some research scholars of Indian Statistical Institute have helped me in many ways. I thank them. I express my gratitude specially to Sandip Sarkar for his valuable suggestion to write my thesis.

Having acknowledged the contributions of all I solemnly state at this point that for all slips and mistakes that may exist and for any dispute that may arise the responsibility is entirely mine.

I must mention here the members of my family- my late mother, my father, my elder sisters whose advices have always encouraged me to complete this hard job with patience. Finally, I also must say that in spite of all of them, I would still not be able to make it without the inspiration of my wife, Debika; her self-sacrificing support, unfailing enthusiasm and loving care have seen me through.

Gouranga Sinha