Next to the official correspondence this is the best available source for a major portion of Taylor’s first administration of Sorapur. Henry Reeve was a cousin with whom Taylor had an intimate friendship. Reeve wrote the preface to the first edition of Taylors autobiography published in 1877. The letters written in racy colloquial style in sharp contrast with the ponderous idiom of the official correspondence. On the pontifical air of the autobiography make most interesting reading. They are, however, full of Taylor’s opinions on many other subjects besides Sorapur and cover the period 1840-48 only.
