Contents

Acknowledgements

Chapter 1 1 – 19

Prison and Convict Labour in Colonial and Post-colonial India

1.1 Studying prison and convict labour
1.2 Imprisonment and convict labour: Theoretical perspectives
   1.2.1 Utilitarian
   1.2.2 Marxist
   1.2.3 Foucauldian
   1.2.4 Postcolonial
   1.2.4 Political Economy
1.3 Methodology and Chapterisation
   1.3.1 Methodology
   1.3.2 Sources
   1.3.3 Chapterisation

Chapter 2 20 – 53

The Genesis of the Prison and Convict Labour: The Mercantilist Rationality

2.1 East India Company and punishment
2.2 The genesis of the prison and extramural labour
2.3 East India Company, convict labour and the Public Works
2.4 Convict labour in the initial decades of 19th century in Great Britain
2.5 Caste and extramural convict labour in India
2.6 The beginning of prison reforms: The Prison Discipline Committee Report
2.7 Summary

Chapter 3 54 – 89

The Birth of the Modern Prison and Intramural Convict Labour in Colonial India: Inducing Convicts to Discipline and Labour

3.1 The birth of the modern prison: The rationale
3.2 The introduction of intramural labour
3.3 The continuation of extramural labour
3.4 Convict labour as practised in Great Britain
3.5 Inducing convicts to discipline and labour
   3.5.1 System of remission
   3.5.2 Convict officers
   3.5.3 Payment of wages
3. 6 Caste and intramural labour
3.7 Summary

Chapter 4

Contestation to Intramural Convict Labour: Prison and Private Industry

4.1 The prison industry and its right to compete in the open market
4.2 Tension between intramural and extramural labour
4.3 Restoration of intramural labour with new regulations
4.4 Complaints by the private entrepreneurs
4.5 Policy of reformation and the relation between prison and private industry
4.6 Summary

Chapter 5

The Political Economy of Reformation and Convict Labour

5.1 The ideology of reformation and convict labour in India
5.2 Convict labour in the context of World War
5.3 Reformation ideology and convict labour in Great Britain
5.4 Caste, convict labour and the policy of reformation
5.5 Summary

Chapter 6

Independent India and Its Convict Labour Policy

6.1 The emphasis on agriculture
6.2 Industrial labour
6.3 On expenditures, earnings and wages
6.4 Challenges and issues in prison industry
6.5 Summary

Chapter 7

Conclusion

Bibliography