Winston Churchill once said "writing a good thesis goes through five phases. In phase one, it is a novelty or a toy. But by phase five it becomes a tyrant ruling your life. Just when you are about to be reconciled to your servitude you end it all well".

Completion of this challenging thesis would have been the most difficult task without guidance and help by all those scholarly personalities who groomed me to make the thesis a reality.

The foremost among them, no doubt, has been Dr. Girish P. Jakhotiya – my guide and mentor – who gave me much needed encouragement and intellectual inputs whenever I was in confused state of mind. He taught me a lot about how to carry on good research, and induced me to learn how good research should be put into practice. No words are adequate to narrate how his guidance enriched me in every department of research. Without him, present research could have proved the most difficult exercise to reach its logical conclusion. I am extremely grateful to him for uplifting me to the higher level of objectivity – the much needed ingredient in present research.

I am also indebted to Prof. K. V. Santhanam for providing me necessary guidance as and when required. He gave me useful insights at the most taxing moments, and whenever I was stuck up while proceeding further.
I will be ever grateful to those professionals from the organisations I visited for their co-operation. They include Mr. Deepak Alva (Asian Paints), Mr. Anil Bhatnagar (Hindalco), Mr. S. Mani (MTNL), Mr. Mukund Vyas (Siemens India) and Mr. Vikas Shirodkar (Johnson & Johnson).

Sincere thanks are also due, to those scholars who motivated and inspired me and lent a hand of support whenever I approached them for help. In particular Mr. Amol Sainis was instrumental in giving guidance on specific issues of professional expertise. I am extremely thankful to him.

I will also always remember encouragement and guidance given by Late Mr. Anil Nadkarni.

It is dedication and respect for research of all these scholars that has enabled me to complete the thesis.

I also thank my colleagues and friends who motivated me to achieve the goal.

I record my gratitude to the staff of the Jankidevi Bajaj Institute of Management Studies for providing me administrative support whenever I called on them for help.

Last but not the least, I will always be grateful to my parents, sister and brother who relentlessly supported me in my endeavor to comprehend the most difficult subject such as performance appraisal.
