PREFACE

Humanity is in the throes of a transition more fundamental than any of the ones it has undergone earlier. As human beings are essentially social beings, no amount of mere individual development is sufficient to create a viable and dynamic society. To create the necessary infrastructure for a peaceful and integrated society, we need to transmit the socially desirable values at an early stage in the children. We, in India, live in a time of unprecedented social turmoil and violence. In this turmoil, the one fact that stands out starkly is the rapid erosion of what are called moral and social values. It’s important to inculcate the values like, cleanliness, punctuality, politeness and helpfulness among students.

A big part of Jurisprudential Inquiry Model is, "helping people understand that there are various ways of resolving social and public issues, so that they can begin to see the different priorities, assumptions and value systems that create a particular world view". In developing sensitivity towards controversial issues, it is not enough that people simply know a hundred different ways of resolving them. What is important is that they have some way of understanding complexity, of understanding other peoples assumptions without pre-judging them, and then finally, understanding that it is not all relative, rather that their own values inform their decision-making, and that they need to make a decision and come to take a stand about what is best appropriate. A crucial part of process of reaching judgement is to make judgements that are open to being changed by new information. In a general sense, "as citizens in a democracy we need to be encouraged to go ahead and act on our own views".
