PREFACE

I am grateful to Dr. G.S. Amur, Professor and Head, Department of English, Marathwada University, Aurangabad, for more reasons than one. He not only suggested the topic for the present study but also patiently groomed me up to deal with it adequately. His guidance, encouragement and help have been invaluable to me and I lack words with which to express my thanks to him sufficiently.

I am also grateful to Mrs. R.P. Jhabvala for granting me an interview in September 1973 and helping me in securing material not available in India. But for her help and cooperation, my task would have become more difficult.

I am also grateful to Shri B.B. Lakhakar, Superintendent Stenographer in the Department of English, Marathwada University, for his meticulous typing; to Shri Purushottam Bagadia, Shri K.P. Dayama, Shri J.V. Sakhare, friends who have stood by me through thick and thin, for their help and encouragement; and to Shri Darryl D'Monte of The Times of India and Mrs. Laseq Futehally of Quest for permission to use my articles.

I have included in Bibliography the list of reviews consulted for the purpose of the present thesis because students who may want to study Jhabvala's works may locate them.
