ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Like all researchers, I have accumulated a very large debt to my teachers, to scholars in the field and to a wide circle of friends. It is a pleasure to open this work by expressing gratitude to them.

I owe a very special debt to Professor Amit Bhaduri, not simply because he has been my supervisor. In fact, I decided to do research in and teach economics almost entirely because of him, although he was not aware of this; to him I owe my interest in economics. As a Ph.D. student it has been my privilege to receive his constant guidance. Besides, he has taken a keen interest in my intellectual growth. I will remain ever grateful to him.

Discussions with Professor Krishna Bharadwaj have been very helpful. In particular, her comments on Chapter I and the Appendix to Chapter III have been immensely beneficial. My thanks are due to her.

My interest in questions relating to Indian economic history in general and commercialisation of agriculture in particular was aroused during the course of lectures delivered by Dr. Prabhat Patnaik to our M.A. class at the CESP. I have benefitted from discussions with him and his comments on the penultimate draft. Dr. Amal Sanyal read the draft very carefully, suggested many improvements and helped to weed out faults of logic and construction. He has also been an unflagging source of inspiration. Several discussions with Dr. Saugata Mukherjee, particularly at the early stages of this work, were very helpful. On specific points, discussions with Dr. Utta Patnaik, Professor Sabyasachi Bhattacharya, Dr. D.N. Rao, Dr. Ramprasad Sengupta, Dr. Sunanda Sen, Dr. Tarun Mukhopadhyay, Mr. Pranab Banerji, Dr. Sanjit Bose, Professor M.K. Rakshit, Professor Benoy Chaudhuri, Dr. Anjan Mukherjee and Dr. Dipankar Kundu helped to clarify ideas. To them all I am grateful. I also owe a debt of gratitude to Mr. R.K. Das, Mr. Alan Smalley and Narayani for leading me to some very valuable information.

Most of my materials were collected from the following libraries: the National Library, Calcutta, the Orissa State Archives, Bhubaneshwar, the Record Room of the Board of Revenue of Orissa, Cuttack and the Central Library, Jawaharlal Nehru University. To the librarians and other staff of all these libraries, and in particular to Mr. Damodar Patra and Mr. Pramatha Chandra of the National Library I am very grateful.

My thanks are due to Mr. C. Vishnumohan, Mr. Biswajit Dhar and Mr. Subhendra Mishra who helped in proof-reading, to Mr. Tapan Das who drew the figures, to Mr. K.D. Sebastian who typed the penultimate draft and Mr. Om Parkash who typed the final draft with skill and care.

Finally, I am grateful to my friends, who generously helped me in various ways.

Pradipta Chaudhury.
