ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I am grateful to a large number of people who have helped shape the present research by their support and critical appreciation of various ideas and issues.

I am deeply indebted to Dr. P. A. Bhagwatwar - Head of the Department of Psychology, Post-graduate Teaching Centre, S. P. College, Pune, for the scholarly and ingenious guidance he provided to me during the present research project. He had been, as ever, the prime source of zeal and inspiration to me in the moments of hope and despair.

I am extremely thankful to my colleagues in the Department of Psychology, S. P. College, for their readiness to adjust with my teaching schedule which at times had to be changed especially in the phase of data collection. Their support and encouragement will go a long way in my future research activities as well.

I am thankful to Prof. Mrs. Manorama Gandhi - Head of the Department of Psychology, St. Miras College, Pune, for sharing post-graduate teaching during my period of study leave for two and half months and thus enabling me to devote my time to the crucial phase of preliminary analysis of the data.

The employees from different organizations have a very important place in the present research programme. The information which they contributed constitutes the base for my work. I express my sincere gratitude to them for their cooperation.

I am grateful to Mr. P. B. Mate and Mrs. Madhuri Mate for providing computer assistance and also for their readiness to help me in resolving contingencies of programming and processing the data.

Thanks are due to Mr. P. M. Kulkarni - Laboratory Assistant, Department of Psychology, S. P. College, for helping me indefatigably in coding and tabulating the data.

I owe a special debt to my wife Maya who cherished in me the spirit of determination and optimism during the entire research activity.

Lastly but not the least, I thank Mr. S. K. Athale for doing excellent job of typing the thesis.

The enormous contribution of researchers to the field of Industrial and Organizational Psychology has been to me a continuous source of critical understanding of various facets of human behaviour at work. I am aware of their commitment and dedication to the field of psychology. I therefore consider myself singularly responsible for any lacuna in the present research endeavour.
