ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

It is with a deep sense of respect and gratitude that I acknowledge the help and guidance given by Dr. N.R. Inamdar, Professor and Head, Department of Politics and Public Administration, and Dean, Faculty of Mental and Moral Sciences, University of Poona. The firm, yet friendly, manner in which he guided me turned my task into an inspiring academic exercise. His informal, patient and encouraging attitude, throughout the period of my research, has moulded my thinking on the right lines, and gave me an abundant confidence in approaching the subject.

I should for ever be grateful to the late M.P.V. Amantha, the true professional the public sector transport industry had the good fortune to have, who, by shining personal example, brought home to me the basic concepts in the management of public transport, and inspired me to become a transport professional.

I thank my innumerable colleague transport managers, who, in both formal and informal situations, helped me gain insight into the working of public sector transport organisations in the country. I am grateful to my faculty colleagues in the Central Institute of Road Transport (CIRT), Poona, for the endless debates we have had on the subject. The help and cooperation given by Shri M.K. Kulkarni, CIRT Librarian, needs special mention.

And, finally, I must thank my wife who put in late hours helping me finalise the thesis and whose presence turned what would have been a drudgery into a pleasant memory. My special appreciation to my son daughter, who, by their non-interference, allowed me to concentrate on my work.
