Acknowledgement

My heartfelt thanks are due to the Management of the School of Business, Alliance University, Bangalore, India, for their constant encouragement and support to my endeavour. I would like to particularly acknowledge the inspiring words of wisdom from our Chancellor Dr. Madhukar Angur who at all points of time ensured that the most conducive research atmosphere prevailed in the institution all through. Prof. Sudhir Angur, who is the Director of the School of Business, Alliance University, has been magnanimous in providing the much needed facilities to complete my work and I acknowledge with gratitude his silent role. Dr. Anubha Singh, Senior Associate Dean, Academic Affairs and Office of the International Affairs, School of Business, Alliance University, has also been very helpful in more than one way and I take this opportunity to express my sincere thanks to her.

Dr. Madhumita Guha Mazumder and Dr. Mihir Dash have been instrumental in providing direction to the application of statistical tools and their interpretations and their suggestions have been invaluable. I would like to place on records my heartfelt gratitude to these two colleagues of mine who have always supported me in my endeavour. Dr. T. N. Ravi contributed in terms of investing his valuable time and enabled me to crystallize the analysis and the dynamics of this research study. But for his timely suggestions and guidance, this thesis would have taken much longer time for completion. I place on record my most sincere thanks to him for being so considerate and helpful. My other faculty fraternity in the institution also came out with valuable suggestions which were incorporated in the thesis and I thank them for their great contribution. I also thank my staff colleagues, particularly, Mr. Chalapathi, Mr. Balaji, Mr. Ravikiran and Ms. Madhuvanti, for their timely assistance in executing my work.

Dr. S. K. Rao, Director General of Administrative Staff College of India (ASCI), Hyderabad, India, is singled out for a very special reason. His moral support and material assistance during the early stages of my study has been unparallel and I acknowledge my deep sense of gratitude to him to make this study see the light of the day.

Dr. K. Krishnamurty, the former Director in the Institute of Economic Growth, New Delhi, India, and presently functioning as the Honorary Professor in ASCI, has been the inspiring force behind this research work. He contributed at all times responding to my doubts and queries and in steering the study in the right direction. I take this opportunity to salute and thank him for his inspired guidance.

Dr. S. Galab, Dr. C. Ravi and Prof. A. Venkateswarlu of Centre for Economic and Social Science, Hyderabad, have been most helpful and supportive in terms of rendering their views on the research work. They also helped me in hiring interpreters in Andhra Pradesh to undertake the primary survey. My sincere thanks are due to all three of them.

The district administrators in the state of West Bengal and Andhra Pradesh extended their whole-hearted co-operation in conducting the primary survey. I place on record my sincere thanks to all of them.

My friends and associates have always stood by me during all periods of this research study and it is my duty to acknowledge their support which made my job easy.

My father Mr. Dipak Ranjan Shome and my mother Mrs. Kabita Shome, both evinced keen interest in my study and continuously encouraged me in my task completion. Their dream of seeing me obtain a doctorate degree was a great motivational force that spurred me to complete the work within the stipulated deadline.

My uncle, my sister and my in-laws also stood by me at all times and extended their full support during the course of my research. I express my sincere thanks to all of them. I also acknowledge the encouragement from all my relatives and sincerely thank them for the same.
Dynamics of the Shift in Occupational Structure in the Process of Agrarian Development in India

My wife, Paramita, played a crucial role and had some good words of courage whenever I showed the slightest signs of slackness due to my physical and mental fatigue. She made a lot of compromises by allowing me to work on my research study instead of demanding my time for domestic chores or household gains. I shall remain silent in acknowledging her wonderful support during the last three years that enabled me to successfully complete my thesis.

Finally, I place to record my sincere thanks to everyone wherever they are for any role that they played in the course of this research study.
