ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

This research study is the outcome of the concerted efforts of many people who have at various times enlightened me, supported and encouraged me and occasionally chided me for slacking on my schedules and in the process taken me one step closer to my dream.

First and foremost, my sincere thanks are for my research guide Dr. Mukund M. Tapkir who believed in me and has in his inimitable style prodded me towards my goal. He has been most helpful in my research work and this study would not have met the time targets but for his valuable guidance.

Thanks are also due to my colleagues and co-doctoral research scholars who helped me avoid common pitfalls in the long process of research and documentation of findings.

The assistance rendered by the Research Center, BMCC is also noteworthy.

It would be remiss on my part if I fail to acknowledge the inputs of all the Corporate CSR and HR personnel I interacted with in the course of my research study. Where due to paucity of time in their schedule, some of them could only briefly explain what they are doing, others went out of their way to explain and show the initiatives undertaken by them.

I extend my heartfelt thanks to all of them. This project would not have seen completion but for their contribution. I was genuinely impressed by the wealth of knowledge they had gathered by the long years of experience in the field and the enthusiasm and fire within which was not dimmed by cynicism or skepticism. I salute all those harbingers of change in our society. May their numbers multiply!

Finally, a word of thanks to my husband who has always supported and motivated me when the going looked tough and my son who despairs of having a mother who wouldn’t quit being a student but is proud of the fact nevertheless.
