I express my sincerest gratitude to my PhD supervisor, Professor Swapan Chakravorty, without whose cruel critiques, occasional snide remarks, and loving indulgence this dissertation would not have been written. I have learnt more from our infrequent but lengthy ‘adda’ sessions than I have ever learnt from books. Formidable in his signature style, the person Swapan-da does not intimidate me anymore. But his scholarship, sincerity as an academic, perseverance and fetish for quality will inspire me for the rest of my life.

I thank my colleagues for their support. I am indebted to Dr. Brishti Basu, Professor Chidananda Bhattacharya and Professor Subir Dhar for their valuable advice and critical comments. Professor Sabyasachi Basu Raychaudhuri of the Department of Political Science deserves special mention. Scholarship veiled in ‘dada’-giri this person has been one of my sharpest critics. He was there whenever I needed him—be it support or inspiration or dialogue.

My very special thanks to my former colleague Professor Subir Datta for his logistic support and his critiques and jibes during our frequent and long evening ‘addas’. I have invaded his resourceful library, and forced him to cull resources for me on many occasions. He has happily indulged. Thanks a ton, Subir-da. A lot of thanks to Antara Datta, research scholar on South-Asian history at Harvard University, for being a resourceful friend in need.

Nandini, my wife, has been the ideal comrade-in-arms throughout. As the first sounding board for my ideas, as the kindly light when I was down, as the diligent typist when I could no more and of course for those sleepless nights, and endless cups of coffee —she can never be thanked enough.. ‘More is thy due than more than all can pay’.
I express my deep gratitude to my father-in-law Dr. B. Haldar. This is not only for his logistic and moral support. He has been an inspiration. I hope I can work as hard as he does when I am his age.

The best reserved for the last. Ma and Baba, thank you very much. This would not have been possible without your choicest blessings and unflinching support. Thank you for being there, as always. Bless me. Thanks to Mishtoon, who is seven seas away, but always close by.
