ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

First and foremost, I acknowledge my gratitude to my supervisor, Professor Sumitra Chishti. The idea behind this study emerged and took shape in the course of brainstorming sessions with her, and her meticulous, and demanding, guidance helped me through the maze of research work. I have benefited immensely not only from her vast intellectual resource base, but also from her kind and solicitous nature. I am forever indebted to her.

I express my thanks to Dr C.S.R. Murthy for his help and cooperation in co-supervising my work, especially in facilitating me to undertake a field-study trip to the World Trade Organization Secretariat in Geneva. My thanks are also due to Professor G.P. Deshpande, former Dean, (School of International Studies) and Dr Kanti Bajpai, former Chairperson (Centre for International Politics, Organization and Disarmament) for enabling me to undertake the trip to Geneva to collect important research material.

The stay at the WTO Secretariat gave a tremendous boost to this work, in terms of access to a wealth of documents, and interaction with a number of eminent experts on the subject. I would especially like to thank Dr Patrick Low, Director (Economic Research and Analysis Division - ERAD), Dr Richard Eglin, Director (Development Division), and Mr Aaditya Mattoo, Counsellor (Trade in Services Division) at the WTO, for their generous cooperation and the facilities they extended to make my work so much easier.

Professor Richard Blackhurst of the Graduate Institute of International Studies, Geneva; Ms Maria del Carmen Pont-Vieira, Counsellor, WTO; and Dr Bijit Bora of UNCTAD, Geneva, also deserve special thanks for taking a personal interest in my work and for all their valuable suggestions.
The time spent at the Secretariat gave me an opportunity to attend various sessions of the Committee on Regional Trade Agreements, and this hands-on experience of deliberations certainly helped shape the study. The libraries at the WTO, the UNCTAD, and the United Nations, Geneva, have been a rich source of data; and I am very grateful to Mr Luigi Stendardo and Mr Morarjee Ravindran at the WTO library for going out of their way to help locate relevant documents.

I also record my appreciation for Rajender Kumar for having done a wonderful job of transforming a cluttered manuscript into neat legible print.

On a personal note. My husband Ashish has been motivating me throughout, and his constant prodding - at times coaxing, at times bullying - egged me on. My parents-in-law have been a tremendous source of support, caring just that bit more to see me through. I can't thank them enough.

A host of friends and well-wishers have been of immense comfort - Mallik, Anitha R., Rajendrum, Geetha, Biggie, my cousin Reba Ba, and sister-in-law Reshme, among others. Two friends deserve special thanks - Shreeparna, for all those days of painstaking help in finalizing the thesis; and Vivek, forever ready to run-around on numerous missions.

And finally, my parents and brother Nirmal have, through their long-distance encouragement, kept me going in times of 'crisis'. My parents, especially my mother, would not consider my education 'complete' without a Ph.D. - and to them I owe this work.
