ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Writing a doctoral thesis can never be an exclusive individual act. It is a product of collective insight, support and above all, skilled guidance. In fact, I have many debts to honestly acknowledge.

At the outset, I am indebted to my Guruji Prof. Avijit Pathak, a scholar with an armour impermeable to flattery and abuse. I owe a special debt of gratitude to Prof. Pathak, who has supervised my entire doctoral endeavour, for his invaluable contribution to my thesis in particular and to my Sociology in general. He is the one who has sculptured and moulded the sociologist in me. Much of my imagination has been immensely influenced by his discipline, demeanour and mode of living. It is impossible on my part to express his influence and contribution in a few words. Prof. Pathak symbolizes an inspiring discovery in my life. I shall remain especially indebted to my Gurumaa for her motherly affection, appreciation and encouragement.

I am gratefully indebted to all my respondents for their cooperative consent, disclosure (of personal and professional secrets) and most importantly, for their insightful and intellectual comradeship. Each of my respondents has spared longer hours for a meaningful face-to-face interaction. Especially, I am thankful to all women professionals studied for the purpose for reposing trust in me, which enabled me to ask any number of questions unconditionally. In fact, a substantial part of this piece is rooted in their experience and insight, agony and ecstasy, anxiety and aspirations, challenges and constraints, conflicts and contradictions, problems and possibilities. All of them have contributed in different ways to my attempts at evolving an engaging and passionate ‘sociology of work’ at the doctoral level.

I am grateful to my esteemed elders Sambit Tripathi (IRS) and Vandana Ramachandran (IRS) for extending spontaneous personal as well as bureaucratic support, which has enabled me to get myself introduced to many of my respondents. I also express my gratitude to my respected seniors Satyajit Mohanty (IRS) & Bhauja and Bhartendu Kumar Singh (IDAS) & Avanti Bhauja for their persistent moral support. In fact, all of them (viz. Sambit Bhai & Bhauja, Jitu Bhai & Bhauja and Bhartendu Bhai & Bhauja) have always inspired me and showered their affection like any other member of my family. All through my JNU days, they have been a source of unconditional emotional and social support.

ii
I also take this opportunity to acknowledge my indebtedness to N.B. Bharati and Prateek Mohanty, IPS officers of Orissa cadre, for their personal and professional help.

My sincere thanks are also due to Prof. Asha Hans, Prof. Manorama Biswal Mohapatra, Dr. Chapala Mishra, Manasi Patra, and Dr. Minati Patnaik for their extraordinary cooperation and assistance in making contacts with some of my respondents. I will be failing in my duty if I do not express my gratitude to Lakshman Mohapatra (ADM), Sambalpur for his unconditional support, which has made my fieldwork in Sambalpur unit easier and memorable.

I am grateful to the University Grants Commission, New Delhi for awarding me the Junior Research Fellowship, which has practically enabled me to concentrate on this work exclusively.

I am also sincerely thankful to my dear companions Binaya Srikant Pradhan (IFS), Ritu Sain (IAS) and Pavan Sain (IAS). They are the ones whose goodwill and noble wishes I have always cherished.

Various friends have been good enough to extend their noble wishes to boost my academic verve. It is difficult to recall and acknowledge all their names. With due regards to all of them, I take this opportunity to name a few i.e., Ajaybabu, Amar, Amarendra, Arjun, Balaram, Bibhu, Chandrima, Chitrasenvai, Deepak, Fakir, Jagannath, Jatinwai, Lalatendu(Lulu), Kailash, Neelu, Nagendra, Nishikant, Pradeep babu, Pradip, Pranab, Rama Bakshya, Ratikant, Ritu Mishra, Sameena & Mukhtarji, Sangeeta, Sanjay, Shashanka, Savita & Pankaj, Sitanshu, Somu, Susant and Tulasi.

I am profusely thankful to my long-time friend Sudeshna for her unstinted moral support and morale-boosting inspiration.

I also acknowledge my sincere gratitude to Sibasis & Archana Bhauja (IAS), Byomkesh (IRS) & Jita Bhauja and Banchhanidhi (IAS) for their inspiring comradeship.

It will be an act of gross insincerity if I don’t convey my honest thankfulness to Rajesh for his unconditional favour, which has considerably facilitated my empirical exercise in Bhubaneswar and made it trouble-free.

It will be a grave omission if I do not expression my honest gratitude to Sudhakar Mausa and Mausi who have made my Rourkela fieldwork smooth and hassle-free. Moreover, their parent-like affection, care and support during my stay in their house will remain a memorable event in my imagination.
My friend Bimal has spared a lot of time, exhausted a lot of energy, devoted a great deal of attention and shown commendable enthusiasm to painstakingly go through the manuscript thoroughly time and again. He has offered valuable suggestions and incisive criticisms, which have helped me revise the piece better. I owe an immense debt to him for shouldering the blue-penciling task.

I am also grateful to my respected elders Shobhan Kar (IRS) and Poonam didi for their timely help and moral support. It will be unfair on my part if I don’t express my deep sense of gratitude to my esteemed seniors Chitta Ranjian Dash (IRS) and Laxmikant Dash (IPS) for their unstinted inspiration.

My sincere thanks are due to the officials of the following libraries for their persistent assistance viz., Jawaharlal Nehru University Library, Nehru Memorial Museum Library, Centre for Women Development Studies Library (all three in Delhi) and V.V. Giri National Labour Institute Library, NOIDA.

I am indebted to all the scholars referred here upon whose work I have drawn for stimulation, and whose ideas and research I have so often incorporated in this thesis. As far as possible, I have attempted to credit their contributions in footnotes and bibliography; but I realize that one can never fully acknowledge the extent of his indebtedness in this way.

I express my sincere gratitude to Vikram Singh who has taken enormous pressure to type the manuscript immaculately.

I also take this opportunity to express my deep gratitude to my revered Panda Mausa (Madhabananda Panda) who has supported in every hour of crisis both at personal and familial levels.

It is difficult to thank those around whom my life inheres and happiness is centred and who have given meaning to my (physical) entity, identity and existence. I am ecstatic to aver that my doctoral submission will bring joy in my family. I can at best dedicate this modest accomplishment to my parents and siblings.

I hope that my revered guruji Prof. Pathak, my teachers at the department of Sociology (JNU) and my respondents will see in this thesis something that I have acquired from them as an apprentice.

New Delhi                                         Bikram Keshari Mishra
August 22, 2005