It has taken me several years to finish this dissertation, and over these years I have accumulated many debts. Here, I will mention only some of those who made the dissertation possible and helped in different ways. It was a great privilege to be able to do my research under the supervision of Professor Romila Thapar and Professor Kunal Chakrabarti. Both gave very generously of their time and ideas, reading every draft of every chapter, and giving detailed comments and suggestions. For their patience through the years I spent trying to figure out what I wanted to say and how I wanted to say it, and for nudging me in the right direction when I felt overwhelmed by the complex material I was dealing with, I am especially grateful. Helping with Studies in History involved working with Professor Neeladri Bhattacharya and Dr Kumkum Roy: unobtrusively, but most definitely, they have taught me a great deal. Dr Roy also read the dissertation as I was finalizing it, sometimes going through a chapter twice. I would like to thank her for that, for her belief in my work, and her encouragement.

Dr Upinder Singh introduced me to J.L. Brockington’s Righteous Rāma in my first month as an undergraduate student. Ever since, she has responded critically to whatever work I have shown her. But much more than for that, I can’t thank her enough for her friendship and sound advice. Dr Uma Chakravarti took time out to read all the chapters – I am grateful to her for her suggestions, and for sharing material on the Mahābhārata that she had brought for herself from Harvard. Shahid Amin, Leela Gandhi, Girish Karnad and Salim Yusufji read and commented on a paper based on Chapters 2 and 3 – I would especially like to thank Leela for her thoughtful scribbles in the margins. For bibliographic help at crucial times, I am grateful to Shahid Amin, Geetanjali Chanda, Rahul Govind and Dr Vijay Tankha.

My father’s aunt, Leela Row, introduced me to Kshama Row, Kālidāsa, Vyāsa and Vālmiki. I remember her here with respect and affection. My grandfather endlessly nagged me to ‘just finish the damn thing’. More usefully, he has also passed on every book and article on ancient India and Hinduism that came his way. My mother was often the first person to listen to paragraphs as they took shape, and to much else besides. For that, and for being the stable centre of our lives, thank you.

My greatest debt though is to my father. He is a presence in so much that I do and in all that I write. This is dedicated to his memory.
