Although a Ph.D thesis is principally an unaccompanied expedition, in which an individual is most often left to his/her own plans and strategies, however this work would not have seen the light of day without the help of many persons whom I earnestly wish to thank.

This work would not have even been initiated in the first place had my thesis Supervisor Prof. Harjit Singh not entrusted me with an extremely interesting research topic. I am eternally beholden to my supervisor for his able guidance, patience in going through my drafts and correcting them in spite of his numerous academic and administrative commitments.

I am greatly in debt to Associate Prof. Dr. Milap Chand Sharma for his unwavering support, good wishes and motivation during the various stages of this work when I was running low on steam.

Thanks are due to JNUMC with whom I grew in confidence as to how to deal with Altitude Sickness. While the fieldwork was physically challenging, I also had my best moments of tranquility and contentment among the mountains of Kinnaur. I would especially like to thank my friends Sudhir, Rajesh, Sukanya, Sanjeev, Vinay and Ratnesh for being ideal companions to share the wilderness of Manirang, Rupin and Buran trails. I am also grateful to those shepherds and numerous other locals who helped me on many occasions when I was wandering rather lost during the course of my field trips and most of whose faces probably I would never see again.

Thanks are also due to my friend Bhim and batch-mates Rakesh Arya, Kanhaiya, Prakash C. Dash, Kanak, Harish Mittal, Vikram and Sweta as well as my seniors, hostel mates, and friends Dr. Vishal Warpa, Dr. Khushal S. Ladghydan, Dr. Shadab Khan, Dr. Jabin Jacob, Ajit K. Gautam, Ajit K., Nirala, Mukesh Gupta, Ranjeet, Deepak, Alok, Rajesh Kumar, Rakesh Saini, Anisur Rahman, Ankush, Tejashri, Durgesh and Shantesh.

This acknowledgment would not be complete without mentioning my friend Dharam Kirti Negi from Moorang and his family as well as Ajit uncle of Reckong-peo who went out of their way to host me on numerous occasions during my field trips.

I am grateful to my friend, Lama Ghese Lobzang Dondup, of Kaza Monastery, who painted such a vivid picture of various religious and historical events, that understanding of these became possible even for an outsider like me. Thanks are also due to the Nuns of Pangmo Nunnery. I was fortunate enough to have taught them and in the process, also to have unlearnt and relearnt many things from their simple way of life. My gratitude to CSIR for granting me fellowship and thus making it economically feasible for me to carry on with this work.
Of course, no amount of thanks would suffice for the kind of moral support I have had from Sujata, Suman, Nina, Sumeet, Akmal, Kaushal and little Mahi. Besides, it is needless to mention that I am grateful to numerous deities of Kinnaur for having a compassionate eye upon me while I was traversing across their zones of influence.

No words can encompass my gratitude to my Nana, Nani and my parents for whom I was living almost as a recluse due to this study; even then, they have always been appreciative of my effort. Thanks are also due to my brother, sister and their families.

Needless to mention, the responsibility for ideas, errors and omissions, if any, rests solely with me.
