List of Tables

| Table 2.1 | Description of categories of employees included in the study | 44 |
| Table 2.2 | Statements of Item analysis by employee towards training programme | 47 |
| Table 2.3 | List of 50 statements selected for inclusion in the final scale | 51 |
| Table 2.4 | Statement showing calculation of reliability \((r)\) | 55 |
| Table 2.5 | Sample size and its distribution | 57 |
| Table 3.1 | Training in RSP over 12 years from (1997-1998 to 2008-2009) | 67 |
| Table 3.2 | Training policy at RSP, SAIL, Tata Steel, and JINDAL | 76 |
| Table 4.1 | Training needs identification in RSP, SAIL, Tata Steel and JINDAL | 103 |
| Table 5.1 | Focus areas and the target group of training programme conducted at Tata Steel | 119 |
| Table 5.2 | Portfolio of SAIL’s training programme | 129 |
| Table 5.3 | Training programmes at RSP, SAIL, Tata Steel and JINDAL | 131 |
| Table 6.1 | Major aspects of training evaluation | 136 |
| Table 6.2 | Training evaluation and effectiveness at RSP, SAIL, Tata Steel, and JINDAL | 158 |
| Table 7.1 | Inter link between OD and organizational Improvement strategies | 166 |
Table 7.2: Organisation Development in practice RSP, SAIL, and Tata Steel

Table 8.1: Responses on ‘the subject covered in the training programme is relevant to the job’

Table 8.2: Training programme helps to solve organisational problems

Table 8.3: Training policies in the organisation facilitates development

Table 8.4: Training programme helps employees to gain faith in themselves

Table 8.5: Training programme is a powerful instrument for organizational development

Table 8.6: Training programme prepares employees to play their role effectively

Table 8.7: Training programme enables employees to understand job assignments and responsibilities better

Table 8.8: Training programme does not help in improving the skills of employees

Table 8.9: Training programme brings the acquisition of new knowledge at workplace

Table 8.10: Training programme acts as motivational tools for employee development

Table 8.11: Training programme improves the worker’s thinking and action in a positive direction
Table 8.12: General awareness about workplace can be enhanced by training programme

Table 8.13: Training programme develops a sense of belongingness and reduces absenteeism

Table 8.14: Training programme does not promote the leadership qualities and sense of responsibility

Table 8.15: Training programme does not contribute to the overall development of employees

Table 8.16: On-the-job training helps an employee to use his leisure time for development

Table 8.17: Training programmes are sometimes too impractical

Table 8.18: Training tends to make an individual less satisfied

Table 8.19: Appropriate teaching aids are such as LCD, OHP etc. are useful in training programmes

Table 8.20: The duration of training programme has been too short

Table 8.21: Training programmes help in improving group cohesiveness

Table 8.22: The knowledge gained in training programme is relevant and useful to job

Table 8.23: Training programme improves the skills of time management

Table 8.24: Training programme improves team participation at work
Table 8.25: Training programme improves individual as well as organisational productivity

Table 8.26: Training programme improves decision making skills

Table 8.27: Training programme helps in improving interpersonal communication

Table 8.28: Training programme enables employees to generate creative solutions

Table 8.29: Training programme creates learning experience

Table 8.30: Training programme improves interpersonal relation to deal with colleagues, superiors and subordinates

Table 8.31: Training programme enables employees to give and receive feedback

Table 8.32: Training programme makes employees to present their ideas clearly and concisely

Table 8.33: Training programme enables employees to be challenging

Table 8.34: Training programme enables employees to be supportive and to build on the ideas of others

Table 8.35: Training programme brings job rotation which is one of the best practices for skill development

Table 8.36: Training programme helps to minimize production cost
Table 8.37: Training programme makes employees more discipline and improve their morale
Table 8.38: Training programme improves work method of employees
Table 8.39: Training programme improves quality in job assignment
Table 8.40: Training programme offers opportunities for growth and advancement of employees’ career
Table 8.41: Training programme helps identify and utilise the potential of employees
Table 8.42: Training programme prepares employees to invest considerable amount of their time for development
Table 8.43: Employees sponsored for training take the training seriously
Table 8.44: The newly learned and developed skills are assessed by the superior after the training programme
Table 8.45: Physical facilities used during training programme are generally conducive for learning
Table 8.46: Training programme enables employees to bring out problems to solving them rather than hiding them
Table 8.47: Training programme creates trust and understanding among employees
Table 8.48: Training programme enables seniors to trust their juniors and prepare them for future responsibilities
Table 8.49: Employees are encouraged to take initiative and do things on their own without having to wait for instructions from supervisors after attending the training programme

Table 8.50: Training programme encourages teamwork

Table 8.51: Findings of employees’ attitude towards training programmes at a glance

Table 8.52: Attitude of employees’ of RSP towards training programmes on the basis of grades

Table 8.53: t-test showing the effect of experience in relation to training programme

Table 8.54: Correlation between the training programme for the Executives and Non executives

Table 8.55: Interlink between the annual training plans at HRDC and CPTI

Table 8.56: Training plans and fulfillment at HRDC

Table 8.57: Training plans and fulfillment at CPTI

Table 8.58: Correlation between performance and training provided in RSP

Table 8.59: Test of interdepartmental variation in the employees’ attitude towards training programme

Table 8.60: Consistency in the training programmes provided over time
Table 8.61: Interrelationship between training provided, employees' attitude towards training programmes, and organisational performance

Table 8.62: Findings of formulated nine hypotheses at a glance

Table 9.1: Findings with respect to the formulated hypotheses

Table 9.2: Findings with respect to the employees' attitude towards training programmes

Table 9.3: Findings with respect to the objectives