Acknowledgements

First of all, I would like to pay respectful tributes to the memory of my Chief supervisor the late Professor Parimal Kumar Das, who inspired me to pursue doctoral studies, and pushed me to complete this work. I remain indebted for his insights, inputs and advice. His uninterrupted guidance and valuable suggestions were of great help. He went through the draft thesis, and wanted to have this thesis submitted to the School at the earliest. Destiny had it otherwise. I am sorry that he left for heavenly abode before its submission. At this moment, my thoughts and prayers go to his wife Mrs. Kusum Das and the family. Mrs. Das always showed kind affection and provided the much-needed encouragement whenever I visited their house for consultations.

My gratitude goes to my supervisor Dr. Ganga Nath Jha for his motivation ever since I set words on papers for this work. I thank him for his time, advice, guidance and assistance. I am grateful to Chairperson Prof. Urmila Singh for her support. My sincere appreciations go to Professors Kalim Bahadur B.D. Ghosal, and Mahendra P. Lama for their encouragement.

I am highly indebted to Mr. Chakra Prasad Bastola, former Minister for Foreign Affairs of Nepal, who has always given me unfailing encouragement and backing for advanced study. I thank Dr. Govind Regmi for his goodwill and initial help.

I would like to gratefully acknowledge the ready help extended by Mr. David Wiencek, President of the International Security Group, Inc., based in Washington D.C., that specializes in international political assessments and East and Southeast Asian political and security affairs, among others. He shared his views and discussed many of the issues confronting the Southeast Asia region. I would like to place on record my very sincere appreciations and thanks to Dr. Bruce Vaughn, Adjunct Associate Professor at the Center for Australian and New Zealand Studies at Georgetown University, and Senior Defense Analyst at the Embassy of Australia in Washington D.C. for his help and comments. Dr. Bruce read the entire manuscript, and wrote a letter giving his impressions of this work. I have greatly benefited from my regular interactions with him and Mr. Wiencek.

I am thankful to a number of people who helped me in the collection of relevant documents and materials. I would like to express warm thanks to Dr. Aditya Trivedi for his assistance. My heart-felt thanks go to Dr. Ramjee Prasad Parajulee, a Ph.D. in international relations from the George Washington University and now an Assistant Professor in Canada, for his help in formulating ideas and developing this thesis in greater depth. His invaluable research assistance, and comments remain ingrained in the study.
My meetings with several scholars provided me valuable insights that helped me clarify and shape my thinking on different issues. I thanked them for sharing their viewpoints and keen interests on the subject. I express my sincere thanks to them all. My special thanks are due to librarians and their officials in Kathmandu, New Delhi, and Washington D.C. Libraries in Washington D.C. and Virginia even got books and journals borrowed for me on inter library loan from Australia. I also thank the Australian Ambassador in Nepal Mr. Brendan for letting me borrow his books for the study. My special appreciation goes to Ambassador Megy Margaret, Deputy Chief of Mission at the Australian Embassy in Washington D.C. for sharing her thoughts on Australian foreign policy towards the region. Embassy officials in Nepal, India and the United States equally deserve special thanks.

It is, in fact, hard for me to find appropriate words to express adequately my appreciation and thanks to my family. I express my gratitude to my dearest brothers Narayan and Keshav Bhattarai, and sister Sita Koirala. They have been a great source of strength to the family. My brother Keshav Bhattarai, Ph.D., now an Associate Professor at the Central Missouri State University, USA provided great support in designing a methodological road map for the study. My son-in-law Krishna Paudel, Ph.D., now teaching at the Louisiana State University, USA provided academic inputs and insights and constantly prodded me to complete this dissertation. I feel fortunate of my daughters Dr. Suniti and Sujata Bhattarai whose understanding and love go far beyond my capacity to praise. Despite their own studies, they were ever ready to listen to my versions of the things at particular strains of my work and stand by my side all the times. My nieces Jagriti and Nimisha Bhattarai provided some technical help. I thank them for their faithful affection and love. My profound thanks go my wife Sita for her dedicated service and patience.

Special thanks go to friends who always came to my rescue whenever my computer ran into difficulties. They all deserve my sincere appreciation.

However, the shortcomings and errors of interpretation in this dissertation are mine alone.

May 2003

Dinesh Bhattarai