ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Like most research workers, I feel tempted to record here one of my personal experiences that has practically evoked my interest to take up investigation on juvenile delinquency. My decision to undertake an empiric study on the juvenile delinquent emerged practically from the illuminating, informal discussions by my teacher and research guide Dr. Ramanath Kundu, Head of the Department of Psychology, Calcutta University, on the problems of indiscipline among school going boys, truancy, increasing tendency to rambling, and recent rampanty of street corner gangs of the juvenile boys. Not only due to his research-provoking scholasticism, but owing to my teacher, Dr. Kundu's persistent and keen support and interest, it has become possible for me to carry on and complete this present study by overcoming certain hinderances at times which seemed to threaten the work progress. I would like to express my deep gratitude to my teacher and guide Dr. Ramanath Kundu for the same.

Also, the work could not have been completed without the active help and cooperation of many people. Most vital have been the help and cooperation of Shri R. N. Sengupta, I.A.S., Secretary, Department of Home, Govt. of West Bengal and Shri S. R. Bhowmick, W.B.C.S., Director, Department of Social Welfare, Govt. of West Bengal, who were gracious enough to accord research permissions on the juvenile populations of Prison and the Borstal School at Berhampore. I am grateful to both of them.

Cooperation from the subjects in the study is also thankfully acknowledged.

On the academic side, I received help and support from many. My deepest gratitude goes to my teacher and research guide, Dr. Ramanath Kundu, without whose continuous review of the progress of the work and various other supports the study could not have been brought to completion. The same can be said about Dr. Pranab Kumar Chakraborti, Lecturer, Burdwan University, whose kind advice and instructions, particularly in framing and forming the text of the thesis must be remembered with gratitude.

I was very much fortunate in receiving encouragement and scholastic help from many individuals of whom I wish to single out Dr. Kanal Mukerji, Senior Psychologist, Jail Department and Part-time Lecturer, Department of Applied Psychology, Calcutta University and Dr. Ranjan Sen, Superintendent, Mental Observation Ward and visiting Psychiatrist, Calcutta Jails, for the kindness they have shown in lending me various books and journals from their own personal collections as well as from their respective office-libraries, in addition to their expertise as and when requested for.

My thanks are also due to the following individuals for various helps and support. They are Dr. (Mrs.) Sunita Sodhi, Lecturer, National Institute of Social Defence, Govt. of India, Mr. N. C. Ghosh, Superintendent, Berhampore Borstal School, West Bengal, Mr. K. S. Moktan, D.I.G., Department of Home, Govt. of West Bengal, Mr. K. S. Shukla, Reader, Institute of Criminology and Forensic Sciences, New Delhi, Dr. (Mrs.) Maitrayee Basu, Clinical Psychologist, Association for Social Health in India (West Bengal Branch), Calcutta, and many others.

Last, but not the least, I gratefully acknowledge the untiring yeomen services by Shri D. L. Chakravorty, who really burnt the midnight oil, in all the senses of the term to complete the typewriting of the text without succumbing to the vexations power-shedding of the day.
