ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

At the beginning, I pay my reverence to Dr. Gopal Bordoloi, a departed soul, under whom I had taken up this research work. Before completion of my work, Dr. G. Bordoloi has left us forever toward his eternal journey. May his pious soul rest in peace.

This thesis could not have come to fruition without the many selfless acts of kindness, generosity and patience, which I have been fortunate enough to receive during the course of this study. To all these individuals I owe an immense debt, and perhaps not surprisingly, my foremost and largest debt is to my research supervisor, Dr. (Mrs.) Nivedita Goswami. I would like to express my deepest gratitude and sincere appreciation to my supervisor for her patience and continuous encouragement. Her unfailing support, constructive criticism, invaluable advice, generous and rich suggestions were of enormous value in the production of this work from the beginning to the end. Her resolute will to make good researchers out of novices in the field (a fact that other research scholars would, no doubt agree with), coupled with her dedication towards inculcating a strong research culture among her students that would not allow any ‘shortcuts’, have always provided me the motivation and enthusiasm to work diligently on this project. Needless to say, she has always been patient with my follies but not with my laxities! I do not know if I have been able to do justice to the knowledge that I have received from you, but I remain ever grateful to you M’am, for always being there and for the intellectual, psychological and moral support I received from you.

I am also extremely grateful to all teachers of the Department of Economics of Gauhati University who have enriched me with methodological and technical skills and continuously supported and provided critical appraisal throughout all stages of this work. My thanks go to staff members of the Economics Department of Gauhati University. I am also grateful to the Principal of Bengtol College for allowing me to pursue this research work and for his constant encouragement for the cause. Special thanks go to the field survey team who worked diligently and faithfully with me. Profound thanks are extended to all my friends particularly Sanjib Phukan, Ajijur
Rahman, Dr. Raju Mandal and Himanshu Kalita, for their encouragement and continuous support. I would also take this opportunity to thank Dr. T.K. Bahadur, Bongaigaon College for providing relevant and constructive suggestions during my tenure as a doctoral student.

I would like to express my gratitude especially towards Dr. Biplab Dhak for assistance towards procuring essential information required for the thesis. The two boys, Samiran and Gopi have helped me immensely whenever asked for, during my research work. My elder sisters Reva and Sanchita deserve special mention for the emotional support they provided me during the entire course of this work. Finally, I would like to express my gratitude to my mother for her unaltering faith in me and my abilities. Maa, I cannot thank you enough for your affection and the support throughout the phase of my research.

Finally, I thank all those people who could not be mentioned here but were directly or indirectly involved in completion of my work and production of this thesis.

...................................................

Gobinda Sarma
Research Scholar
Department of Economics
Gauhati University