This study is shaped by my teachers, who wholeheartedly guided me in my research work. Raju S. as a research supervisor and a friend always persuaded me to think and read books differently. K. T. Rammohan was completely involved in the making of this study. He helped me to learn the concepts of political economy and relate them with anthropological concerns. Rajan Gurukkal supported and encouraged me beyond the limits of a director. Informal discussions with him about the history of Western Ghats and the inhabitants therein helped to shape the historical part of this research. They also helped in wrapping up this study by reading the draft at every stage and significantly contributed to finalise it. Nizar Ahmad taught the seriousness and importance of research methodology and social theory. P. Sanal Mohan, my previous supervisor, who had to withdraw from the responsibility of a guide for technical reasons was supportive till the end of the work. T. K. Ramachandran always inspired me to read fundamental books and taught me to be committed to what is being done. M. Ramakrishnan initiated me into the study of anthropology.

I have greatly benefited from the scholarly interactions with anthropologists like Kaushik Ghosh and Anjan Ghosh. Kaushik gave me important materials for reading and was kind enough to read the preliminary draft of the thesis.

Discussions with many friends have helped me to clarify my thinking. I owe my thanks to Amruth, Sunandan, Cybil, Bindu Menon, Reshma Bharadwaj, Tatagathan, Levin, Rajesh Komath, Roopesh and Susan Simon.

I received support from the staff of various libraries and other institutions in collecting the materials. In particular I owe so much to the staff of SSS, CDS, MGU library, Kerala University library, JNU library, Nehru Memorial Museum (Delhi), Ratan Tata library, KIRTADS library, CHMK library (Calicut), libraries of the forest department (Trivandrum, Kottayam and Thekkady), KFRI library (Peechi, Trichur).

Apart from the time spent on field work and material collection from various libraries, I spent most of my student life at SSS. My intellectual debt to this institute is immense. Further I found some of my best friends: Amruth, Sujith Kumar Parayil, Reny, Stuart, Ignatius, Rajesh Komath, Aby, Pramod, Suresh, Subair, Renjini, Shilujas, Harsha, Biji, Ratheesh, Anil, Indu, Mythri, Susan, Geetha, Maya, Cybil, Roshini, Justin and Nayna.
I received much love and kindness from Radhika teacher and Suma Kesavan.

I received full support of the staff of forest department during the field work days. I owe much to James Zacharias, John Augustine Nirmal, Sivadas, Pramod Krishnan and Simon.

I had the benefit of enjoying the warmth of many homes: Haridas, Sona, Mythra; Radhika teacher, Sriram, Rugmini Amma, Devika, Sreekutti, Kunjammu; Raina, Noby, Rony; Reshma Bhradwaj, Dileep Raj; Shaju, Shammi, and Mon.

This thesis would not have materialized without the scholarship like Junior Research Scholarship, MGU and Jawaharlal Nehru scholarship for doctoral studies, Jawaharlal Nehru memorial fund, Teen Murthi House, New Delhi.

Finally, I could not have carried out this study without the support of my mother and uncle Sidhatrhan. Also I owe my gratitude to my sister, Sasi Chechi, Vilasettan, Jayarajan, other uncles, aunts, cousins, nephew and niece for their love and care; and to my late grand mother who had desired the completion of the thesis.

I dedicate this thesis to the Mannans and Paliyans of Kumily.
