

Table of Contents

- About nāmakīrtana, the text under study and the author.................................................. 1
- Introduction.......................................................................................................................... 1

1. Nāmasaṅkīrtana and its connection to liberation ................................................................. 2

2. Bhagavannama Bodhendra Swami ....................................................................................... 5

   - Birth and early life of Bodhendra ......................................................................................... 6
   - Influence of Bodhendra’s life and ideology during his lifetime ............................................. 8
   - Last days and Samādhi of Bodhendra ................................................................................. 11

3. Works of Bodhendra ............................................................................................................. 12

4. About Bhagavannāmāmāṃta Rasodaya ............................................................................. 13

Part II - A gist of the chapters with annotations and explanatory notes.......................... 1

1. Gist of the first ullāsa ....................................................................................................... 18

   1.1. Invocatory verses ............................................................................................................. 18
   1.2. Loftiness of nāmakīrtana and the background for this book ........................................... 21
   1.3. Organization of the chapters – an overview of the content ............................................ 25
   1.4. Qualifications for undertaking the practice of nāmakīrtana ........................................... 26
   1.5. Consequence of not engaging in nāmakīrtana or attaining scriptural learning without devotion .................................................................................................................. 30
   1.6. Position of the Šāstra-s on the censure of one Form of the Supreme on account of fanatic devotion to Another or regarding the censure of the practice of nāmakīrtana ........................................... 42
1.7. Does the sin of pratyāvāya accrue to those who practice scripturally ordained karma-s, without the practice of nāmakīrtana? ................................................................. 47

2. Gist of the second ullāsā ............................................................................................................. 51

2.1. Greatness of spontaneous nāmakīrtana ............................................................................. 51

2.1.1. Setting up the position of nāmakīrtana as the proximate means for (the desire for) Knowledge .................................................................................................................................................. 56

2.1.2. Destruction of a multitude of nefarious sins as a consequence of spontaneous nāmakīrtana .................................................................................................................................................. 58

2.1.3. Accrual of great merit as a consequence of unwitting nāmakīrtana ................................ 60

2.2. How does one attain (the practice of/inclination for) nāmakīrtana? ......................... 63

2.2.1. How long (i.e., for how many births) are meritorious actions to be undertaken to attain liberation? .................................................................................................................................................. 67

2.2.2. Different ways by which the Lord’s name can be glorified ........................................... 73

2.2.3. Six types of meritorious actions that earn the merit needed for nāmakīrtana ............... 74

2.2.4. Gradation of devotees based on the extent of merit from past births ......................... 78

2.3. Nature of the Supreme Lord who is to be worshipped: saguṇa or nirguṇa? ........... 85

2.4. Prescription of karma-yoga for one who is unable to practice meditation ................. 87

2.5. A summary of the purport of this chapter and importance of nityakarma .................. 89

2.5.1. Impediments to the fructification of nāmakīrtana ....................................................... 92

3. Gist of the third ullāsā ............................................................................................................. 97

3.1. Loftiness of nāmakīrtana as a spiritual means ............................................................... 97

3.1.1. Nāmakīrtana as a spiritual means in lieu of other forms of expiations and dharma-s 99

3.1.2. Nāmakīrtana being accessible to everyone, without restrictions ............................... 102

3.2. Six questions asked by Yudhiṣṭhira that highlight the loftiness of nāmakīrtana as an all-encompassing spiritual practice ................................................................. 105
3.2.1. Importance of devotion and a clarification on the nature of nāmakīrtana and its fruit .......................................................... 110

3.2.2. Speciality of nāmakirtana – being devoid of rules (pertaining to time, place, etc.), auxiliaries, materials, a mediator, etc. .................................................. 118

3.3. A single utterance of the name of the Lord or repetition? .......................... 124

4. Gist of the fourth ullāsa ................................................................. 128

4.1. Loftiness of nāmakīrtana as per the Viṣṇupurāṇa ........................................ 128

4.1.1. The evils seen in Kaliyuga ............................................................. 129

4.1.2. One great quality of Kaliyuga .......................................................... 134

4.1.3. Nāmakirtana as the one and most lofty dharma to be practiced in Kaliyuga ........ 142

4.2. Loftiness of nāmakīrtana as per the Bhāgavata-purāṇa ................................ 151

4.2.1. Why are the other dharma-s (i.e., besides nāmakīrtana) not effective in Kaliyuga? ... 151

4.2.2. How does nāmakīrtana prove to be effective in Kaliyuga? ........................... 154

4.2.3. Where is this Lord who is to be worshipped through nāmakīrtana? ................. 158

4.2.4. A summary of the loftiness of nāmakīrtana for Kaliyuga ......................... 159

4.3. Loftiness of nāmakīrtana as per the Bṛhaspati-purāṇa .................................. 162

4.3.1. Description of the failings of Kaliyuga ............................................... 163

4.3.2. Nāmakirtana - a shield against the effects of Kaliyuga and vouchsafes of all attainments ................................................................. 166

4.3.3. Mapping of the purport of verses from various purāṇa-s ............................. 172

4.4. Loftiness of nāmakīrtana as per the Brahmakairvarta-purāṇa ........................ 175

4.4.1. The nature of Kaliyuga recounted ...................................................... 177

4.4.2. Nāmakirtana as a remedial measure for the effects of Kaliyuga .................... 179

4.4.3. Potency of nāmakīrtana in Kaliyuga (a comparison with other spiritual disciplines and their efficacy in other yuga-s) ...................................................... 182
4.5. Loftiness of nāmakīrtana as per the Garuḍa-purāṇa ................................................. 184

4.6. Loftiness of nāmakīrtana as per the Śivarahasya ....................................................... 185
   4.6.1. Efficacy of a single instance of nāmakīrtana (śravaṇa or kīrtana or smaraṇa) ..........187
   4.6.2. Since the sins are several, are not several repetitions of nāmakīrtana required? .......189

4.7. Loftiness of nāmakīrtana and its various forms (śravaṇa, smaraṇa,…) as per the HarivamŚa.......................................................................................................................... 194
   4.7.1. Kīrtana posited as being superior even to liberating Knowledge .................................200
   4.7.2. Loftiness of even a single instance of nāmakīrtana .....................................................201

4.8. One Name or a thousand? Specific Names for specific attainments ......................... 207
   4.8.1. Qualification of all to chant a single Name of the Lord ................................................212
   4.8.2. Verses extolling the loftiness of nāmakīrtana are not just a eulogy .........................213
   4.8.3. How does nāmakīrtana to attain a specific material goal lead to liberation? ..........218

4.9. A summary of the special features of nāmakīrtana as the loftiest of spiritual means  ...................... ..........................................................................................................................221

5. Gist of the fifth ullāsa ................................................................. ........................................... 226
   5.1. Nāmakīrtana prescribed by the Ṛgveda ................................................................. 226
   5.2. Nāmakīrtana prescribed by the Yajurveda .......................................................... 250
   5.3. Nāmakīrtana prescribed by the Sāmaveda ........................................................... 253
   5.4. Nāmakīrtana prescribed by the Atharvaveda ......................................................... 255
   5.5. Śatarudra – an efficacious means for liberation ..................................................... 260
      5.5.1. A multitude of offences being destroyed on account of uttering the name of the Lord just once .................................................................................................................................282

6. Gist of the sixth ullāsa .....................................................................................................291
6.1. Rebuttal to arguments regarding people with vacillating faith and mild dispassion

6.1.1. Quashing the claim that nāmakīrtana is not meant for those with the qualification for scripturally ordained karma-s and for renunciates ................................................................. 293
6.1.2. Vanquishing the objection to the claim that nāmakīrtana is never fruitless ......................... 327
6.1.3. Rebutting the claim that the Veda-s ought to be chanted (studied, practiced) at the exclusion of nāmakīrtana ...................................................................................................................... 333
6.1.4. Addressing the question, ‘Does nāmakīrtana eradicate all sins or does liberating Knowledge?’ .......................................................................................................................... 343
6.1.5. Can nāmakīrtana be abandoned by those on whom there are scripturally enjoined nityakarma-s/ upāsana-s on account of lack of time? ................................................................. 346
6.1.6. Regarding the practice of nāmakīrtana (vs kāmyakarmas) for the fulfillment of desires and a motivation for undertaking repeated chanting of the name of the Lord ...................... 348
6.1.7. If nāmakīrtana is practiced all the time, where is the time to chant names for the fulfillment of specific desires? .................................................................................................. 352
6.1.8. Regarding the practice of nāmakīrtana by one who does not have desires ............................. 353
6.1.9. Regarding the applicability of nāmakīrtana to the three types of renunciates: one who has renounced after attaining realization, one keen only on realization and to one who has renounced on account of a dire exigency (such as on the death-bed) ......................... 355
6.1.10. Arguments to establish that nāmakīrtana is both necessary and sufficient for liberation (i.e., all efforts towards gaining Knowledge are rendered futile without the performance of nāmakīrtana and with the practice of nāmakīrtana, liberation is attained) 366
6.1.11. Is the Lord to be worshipped as possessed of attributes or as the attributeless Supreme? ......................................................................................................................................... 373
6.1.12. It is said that all spiritual practices for Knowledge are rendered futile without nāmakīrtana. But, if nāmakīrtana is performed all the time, where is the time for other karma-s, let alone for them to be rendered futile? ............................................................................. 388
6.1.13. The process of realization: From nāmakīrtana to samādhi to jñāna ................................. 390
6.1.14. Bhajanaṁ (devotional service) prescribed for all is of the form of nāmakirtana, etc. 432
6.1.15. Knowledge accrues only to one with devotion and not otherwise ......................... 440
6.1.16. Speciality of multiple practices or repetitions of nāmakirtana .............................. 455
6.1.17. Worldly transactions and nāmakirtana ................................................................ 464
6.1.18. Even a single instance of nāmakirtana, the cause, brings about the effect, viz., liberation ................................................................. 468
6.1.19. Strengthening the idea that nāmakirtana is the proximate means for knowledge .... 474
6.1.20. Redundancy of karma for one with faith in performing relentless nāmakirtana ...... 478

6.2. Rebuttal to arguments regarding those with dispassion ........................................... 482
6.2.1. Regarding those who are extremely attached to sense objects .............................. 497

6.3. Rebuttal to arguments regarding those with steadfast faith ..................................... 534

6.2. Rebuttal to arguments regarding those with dispassion ........................................... 482
6.2.1. Regarding those who are extremely attached to sense objects .............................. 497

6.3. Rebuttal to arguments regarding those with steadfast faith ..................................... 534

Part III – A comparative study of nāmakirtana and critical analysis of the text ........ 618
7. A gist of the concept of the spiritual goal and role of nāmakirtana in other major religions ........................................................................................................ 618
7.1. The role of nāmakirtana in Abrahamic religions ....................................................... 618
7.2. The role of nāmakirtana in Buddhism ......................................................................... 637
7.3. The role of nāmakirtana in Jainism ............................................................................. 639
7.4. The role of nāmakirtana in Sikhism ............................................................................. 640
7.5. Other forms of nāmakirtana ....................................................................................... 641

8. Critical Study .................................................................................................................. 644
8.1. Literary style ................................................................................................................. 644
8.2. A summary of the philosophy expounded by Bodhendra ........................................ 645
8.3. A discussion on the verses of the bhakti-yoga, the twelfth chapter of the Bhagavadgītā .......................................................... 648

8.3.1. The meaning of ‘matkarma’ is not restricted to ‘nāmakīrtana’, etc.,..................................................653
8.3.2. What is the difference between ‘matkarma’ and ‘madyoga’?..............................................................656
8.3.3. The statement “Do karmayoga if you are unable to do Nāmakīrtana” is tantamount to saying that Nāmakīrtana is difficult to perform when compared with karmayoga. ...........657
8.3.4. All one’s ordained karma can be performed as Īśvara-ārādhana (worship of Īśvara)..........................658
8.3.5. Worshipping Bhagavān through actions is a greater expression of devotion than worshipping Him only through nāmakīrtana ........................................................................................................659
8.3.6. Bhakti is included in karmayoga-niśṭhā as per the Bhagavadgītā ........................................................................661
8.3.7. Bhagavatpāda considers this chapter as dealing with aksara-upāsana and karma-yoga only. ........................................................................................................................................662

8.4. Nityakarma need not be reduced to accommodate nāmakīrtana ......................... 663

8.5. Is devotional worship of saguṇa-Īśvara primary sādhanā for those on the path of jñāna? .......................................................... 665

8.5.1. The fourth type of bhakta, viz., a jñāni is one who worships the Lord as non-different from oneself and not on Īśvara having forms (saguṇa-vāsudeva-mūrti) and as separate. ..671
8.5.2. The word ‘bhajana’ by itself does not imply saguṇa-upasana in the context of the jñānins ...................................................................................................................................................680

8.6. The import of the word ‘prapatti’ in verse 7.14 and of the word śaraṇam’ in verse 18.66 of the Bhagavadgītā. .......................................................... 683

8.7. Bodhendra’s interpretation of the word, ‘kirtana’ in verse 9.14 of the Bhagavadgītā does not conform to that of Bhagavatpada. .......................................................... 687

8.8. Bodhendra’s view that the concluding verse of the chapter on dhyāna-yoga relates to saguṇa worship is contentious ........................................................................... 693
8.9. Nāmakīrtana and liberating Knowledge ................................................................. 700

8.9.1. Nāmakīrtana is not the (immediate) cause for Liberation and so it cannot be superior to jnana, the most proximate cause ........................................................................................................... 701

8.9.2. The means can be easy, lofty and important but not superior to the end ............... 703

8.9.3. Drawbacks of the king-doctor example provided ..................................................... 704

8.10. Who are yogavittamā-s: saguṇa upāsaka-s or nirguṇa upāsaka-s? ..................... 705

8.11. Is nāmakīrtana (i.e., bhakti) the antaraṅga sādhana or the bahiraṅga sādhana for dhyāna? ....................................................................................................................................... 712

8.12. The secret of Bhagavadgītā ....................................................................................... 720

8.13. A discussion on the means to Knowledge prescribed in the Bhagavadgītā .......... 724

8.14. Conclusions ............................................................................................................. 728

Bibliography ..................................................................................................................... 731