REFERENCES

7. Aziz, A (2011) “Role demands & work-family balance experience in Malaysia: The different moderating effects of Collectivism & Gender role Identity among diverse ethnic groups” School of Management, Queensland University of Technology.

75. Dyne, L. V., Kossek, E., & Lobel, S (2009) Less needs to be there: Cross level effects of work practices that support work-life flexibility and enhance group processes and group level OCB. Human Relations, 60(8): 1123-1154

Industrial and Labor Relations Review, Vol.62, no-4, pp 622-624

140. Kirchmeyer, C (1993) Non-work to work spill-over: A more balanced view of the experiences and coping of professional women and man. Sex roles. 28:531-552

145. Kossek, E (2012) Work family policies: Linking National Contexts, Organizational Practice and People from Multi-level change, school of Human Resources and Labor Relations, Michigan Sate University, USA

152. Kodz, Kersely, Strebler & O'Regan (1998) Breaking the long hours culture, Institute for Employment Studies, Sussex University, IES report 352

164. Lewis, S (1997) Family-friendly policies: Organizational Change or playing about at the margins? Gender, work and organizations, 4, 13-23.

Page 224 of 242

