'THE REVOLUTIONARY'

Quoted in the Kakori Judgment

Present :

The Hon'ble Sir Louis Stuart,

Kt., C.I.E., I.C.S. Chief Judge

The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Muhammad Raza, Khan Bahadur.

Between the 28th and 31st of January, 1925, four-page printed pamphlet was circulated secretly by post and by hand in the United Provinces and other part of India. This pamphlet bore the name of no printing press. The heading was "The Revolutionary-An Organ of the Revolutionary Party of India." It was called the first number of the first volume, and bore the date of the 1st January, 1925.

This was the first paragraph :

"Chaos is necessary to the birth of a new star and birth of life is accompanied by agony and pain. India is also taking a new birth, and passing through that inevitable phase, when chaos and agony shall play their destined role, when all calculations shall prove futile, when the wise and the mighty shall be bewildered by the simple and the weak, when great empires shall crumble down and new nations shall arise and surprise humanity with the splendour and glory which shall be all its own."

In continuation it was stated that a new power had come into existence in India, that power being the revolutionary movement amongst young men, which in spite of all opposition would eventually triumph. This movement had withstood repression for twenty years. It was now stronger than ever before, and its prospects were brighter. The writer then proceeded to justify the movement on the ground that India was ruled without justification by foreigners whose authority rested on dominion by the sword. The sword of these foreigners was to be met by the sword of the Indians.

The writer then proceeded to declare the “immediate” object of the Revolutionary Party which was “to establish a Federal Republic of the United States of India by an organised and armed revolution.”

Under this Republic there would be universal suffrage, nationalisation of railways, mines, leading manufactures and the shipping industry. The legislature would control the executive. The aims of the Revolutionary Party were stated to be international rather than national and in this respect it follows the footsteps of the great Indian Rishis of the glorious past and of Bolshevik Russia in the modern age. There would be equal rights for all communities, general co-operation and a spiritual recognition of the realities of life.

The writer continued that the time was not ripe for the disclosure of the policy and the programme of the Party. The Party reserved to itself freedom to associate or not to associate with the Indian Congress. Then follow the words: “But this Party views all constitutional agitations in the country with contempt and ridicule.” After some amplification of this idea came the following passage :

“Young Indians! Shake off your illusions, face realities with a stout heart, and do not avoid struggles, difficulties and sacrifices. The inevitable is to come. Do not be misguided any more. Peace and tranquillity you cannot have and India’s liberty can never be achieved through peaceful and legal means. The following memorable words of a great English author Mr. Robertson may serve to make the wise men of India wiser still:

“The movement and programme of reform was mainly the achievement of Irish and Protestant leaders to whom British statesmen had revealed the fatal secret that England could be bullied but not argued into justice and generosity. (England under the Hanoverians, page 197) “Indian public leaders are still ignorant of this ‘fatal secret’ or else they are foolishly wise to ignore it.”

The writer then proceeded to dispute the accuracy of the view that Indians were unable to drive the British out of India by force of arms. The pamphlet concluded as follows :

“A few words more about terrorism and anarchism. These two words are playing the most mischievous part in India to-day. They are being invariably misapplied whenever any reference to the revolutionaries is to be made because it is so very convenient to denounce the revolutionaries under that name. The Indian Revolutionaries are neither terrorists nor anarchists. They never aim at spreading anarchy in the land, and therefore they can never properly be called anarchists. Terrorism is never their object and they cannot be called terrorists. They do not believe that terrorism alone can bring independence and they do not want terrorism for terrorism's sake, although they at times resort to this method as a very effective means of retaliation. The present government exists solely because the foreigners have successfully been able to terrorise Indian People. The Indian People do not love their English Masters, they do not want them to be here-but they do help the Britishers simply because they are terribly afraid of them-and this very fear resists the Indians from extending their helping hand to the Revolutionaries, not that they do not love them.

“This official terrorism is surely to be met by counter-terrorism. A spirit of utter helplessness pervades every stratum of our society and terrorism is an effective means of restoring the proper spirits in the society without which progress will be difficult. Moreover the English Masters and hired lackeys can never be allowed to do whatever they like unhampered, unmolested. Every possible difficulty and resistance must be thrown in their way. Terrorism has international bearing also because the attentions of the enemies of England are at once drawn towards India through the acts of terrorism and revolutionary demonstrations and these revolutionaries are thereby able to form an alliance with them, and thus expedite the Party has deliberately abstained itself from entering into this terrorist campaign at the present moment even at the greatest provocation in the form of outrages committed on their sisters and mothers by the agents of foreign government, simply because the Party is waiting to deliver the final blow. But when expediency will demand it the Party will unhesitatingly enter into a desperate campaign to terrorism, when the life of every officer and the individual who will be helping the foregin rulers in any was will be made intolerable, be he Indian of European, high or low. But even then the party will try incesantly to orgainse a hand of selfless and devoted workers who will devote their best energies towards the political and social emancipation of their country. They will always remember that the making of nation requires the self-sactifice of thousands of obscure men and women who care more for the idea of their country than for their own comforts or interest, their own life and the lives of those whom they love.'
