I deem it my earnest duty to acknowledge the efforts of all my well-wishers whose guidance, assistance, affection and support gave me the required zeal and confidence for completing this work.

I would like to express my deep gratitude to my esteemed guide Prof. Badri Narayan, who has been in true sense a friend, philosopher and mentor to me. He almost held my hand like a toddler and taught me to walk on my feet, giving me the lens to see things that I couldn't. Whenever I felt I had come to a dead end in my research, he came up with very insightful suggestions. This research is based to a great extent on his insights, experiences and training.

I am grateful to the director of G. B. Pant Social Science Institute, Prof. Pradeep Bhargava, for his initial encouragement and student-friendly attitude. Director sir was like second guide to me. He not only helped me in my research with his critical comments, but also helped me in my overall personality development.

My sincere thanks goes to Prof. Satyanarayan of Allahabad University, for giving me the initial understanding of the western Uttar Pradesh region and for sharing his own research experiences. I am also thankful to Dr. Ajay Gudavarthy of political science department of JNU for his insightful discussions and writings. I would like to thank Dr. Hanif Shastri and Dr. Radhavallabh Tripathi of Sanskrit Sansthan in Delhi: Hanif Shastri encouraged me as a researcher and appreciated my efforts of exploring the research from different angles; Dr. Radhavallabh Tripathi helped me get to the right sources to understand the discourse on female ‘body’ through Sanskrit texts.
A special thanks to Mr. B. B. Mishra, the librarian at G. B. Pant Social Science Institute. Mishra sir has been very helping and encouraging. Gautam Ji, who lives in Delhi and is the publisher and distributor of books on Dalit Literature, introduced me to various relevant books. Pradeep Jain needs special mention, for he agreed to meet me in his own silent corner of Muzzafarnagar and kept guiding and encouraging me during the entire period.

I truly believe that my research is mostly a collective effort of my learned friends: Rama Shanker’s insights and creativity forced me to keep pace with my own readings; Vivek, who is pursuing his Ph.D. from JNU, helped me edit most of the research papers that were published during this period; Kamrul helped me stay grounded with his reality check statements; Vikas, friend and fellow Ph.D. co-struggler also encouraged me a lot in having faith in my line of thought and approach by endorsing certain facts through the findings of his own research.

I am grateful to all my other friends who stood by me in times good and bad during this entire process of my research work.

A Special thanks to Late Rajesh Verma of Muzaffarnagar. Rajesh was a journalist with IBN 7, who lost his life during the Muzaffarnagar riots. He had become a very dear friend during my field visits. He is no more, but his presence is always felt and acknowledged.

My journalist friends, Sefat and Abhishek, have been the key people because of whom I comfortably got introduced to a totally unfamiliar territory of western Uttar Pradesh. It was a much-needed initial help.

Finally, I owe my heartiest thanks to my loving parents -- especially, Ma -- who have been supportive at all times and helped me make this work possible with their love and encouragement.

Thank you!
