ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

First and foremost, I express my sincere gratitude to my supervising guide, Dr. T. Asokan, Professor, Department of Management Studies, Kannur University, for the effort and pain he has taken during the entire process of my research work. I acknowledge his valuable help and significant contribution from the very beginning of shaping the title of the study, to completing the procedural formalities of the dissertation submission. He has been very patient and kind to me even during his hectic schedule to find time for discussion and to go through the manuscripts many times for enabling me to submit this dissertation. He has been continuously helping and encouraging me at all the stages of this study for ensuring quality and perfection.

I am indebted to Dr. P.T Raveendran, Professor and Head and Dr. U. Faisal, Reader, Department of Management Studies, Kannur University who extended their valuable advice and support that had a great help for me during my study. I express my gratitude to Professor Mallikarjunappa, Mangalore University, for his invaluable advice regarding the framing of the research methodology. I thank Prof. N Raju, Department of Statistics, University of Calicut for his advice, which was instrumental in utilizing the statistical tools in the analysis part of my research. I also express my sincere thanks to Dr. Rameshwaran, Kannur University and Dr. Johney Johnson, M.G University.

I acknowledge the valuable support of Dr. Nicola Cooper, Head of Learning and development, Carnegie Asia Pacific, and Ms. Suzen Ponder, Research analyst, Carnegie research division, Mr. Benoy John, Norma, for their help in analysis and interpretation of data and structuring the report. I take this opportunity to express my gratitude to the librarians of the Indian Institute of Management, Kozhikode, Kannur University, University of Calicut, Kerala University, Cochin University, and CDS, Trivandrum.

Let me thank my parents, whose blessing and prayers gave me prosperity and the strength to face obstacles in life. I express a special thanks to my sweetheart Fathima, my little ones Aman and Roshan, for their support and also providing me a comfortable environment to enable me to complete this work.
