Completing a Doctoral thesis makes one learn a lot; not only about the intricacies of the research topic but also about life, mistakes and patience. It also teaches one humility, and makes one realise the indispensability of the support system of the near and dear ones! I would like to remain indebted to my parents forever!

No words can express my gratitude to my research guide Prof. Rajas Parchure. In fact, half the battle was won when Prof. Parchure, a stalwart in the field of insurance and finance, consented to guide me on this subject. I am extremely grateful to Prof. Parchure for sparing time from his heavy responsibilities to discuss even the most trivial issues and for entertaining my amateurish questions with an amused tolerance. He shared my interest and enthusiasm about the topic of this research. This in itself was a tremendous morale-booster. I have gained enormously from his learned guidance on the subject.

My heartfelt thanks to Prof. Dhanmanjiri Sathe, (Head of the Department of Economics, University of Pune) for providing me the environment conducive for my study. She almost compelled me to maintain the momentum of the study and I seriously doubt whether I could have completed the thesis in absence of her cooperation, candid opinions and cordial support.

I am extremely grateful to Mr. R.S.Shah, Executive Director, LIC (Rtd.), for his unconditional cooperation, enthusiasm about the subject and for his valuable inputs on many areas including the actuarial concepts, workings of the Life insurance Corporation of India and legal aspects.
I am very grateful to Dr. Rohini Sahni for ‘being always there’ with her guidance and encouragement at every stage of this research. Her suggestions on the methodology of primary data collection were of great help.

I must thank the actuaries, the insurance officers, and experts for their valuable guidance, and insiders’ views about the life insurance industry in India; without mentioning the credentials, as the matter is subjudice.

I thank my colleagues and staff of the Department of Economics, University of Pune for their cooperation.
I thank Mrs. Bhagyashree Sane of the National Insurance Academy Library for her proficient cooperation.

Thanks to my father in-law Mr. S.T. Kulkarni, retired officer from LIC of India who has been my friend, philosopher and guide through out this journey.

My daughter Kimaya was the only person having a veto right over the use of my time. I thank her for not using it very frequently during the whole period of my study.

It is too often quoted that there is a woman behind every man’s success. It is not so often admitted that ‘there has to be a supportive husband behind any married woman’s every little accomplishment….!’ Thanks Ranjit!
