Social Policy should serve as the base for any social programme by defining it and giving direction to it. Unfortunately, most social programmes lack this, more so in developing countries. Sweden is known not only for introducing the most and the best welfare programmes for its people but also for establishing proper and adequate linkages between social policy and social programmes. How it is achieved is studied at length by taking the programme for the unemployed care in Sweden as a case.

In compiling this work, I have received inspiration, encouragement, guidance and help from several individuals and organisations. I wish to put on record my appreciation and sincere thanks to the following, among others:

- Professor G. Pandey, my research guide, for his guidance and patience;
- Professors M.S. Gore, Armaity Desai, P. Ramachandran, R.K. Hebsur, and Jacob Aikara for their encouragement and guidance at different stages of the work;
- My research colleagues at the Tata Institute of Social Sciences, Bombay - Biswaroop Das, P.B.Bhasker Rao and and G.Surya Rao;

- The Lutheran World Federation, Geneva for providing scholarship, without which undertaking the study in Sweden would not have been possible;

- The authorities and officers of the Swedish Government and office-bearers of various voluntary bodies in Sweden for sharing their views and data on the theme of the study;

- M.Vijayarahavan, Shanta kingston, Shanti Doraiswamy, Ravi and colleagues at Aide et Action who at various times provided secretarial assistance;

- Esther, my wife for her support and moral encouragement;

- My father, late Mr.R.D.Williams, who was a great source of inspiration to me in all my endeavours. I dedicate this work to his memory.

W. JAMES ARPUTHARAJ

(iii)