Acknowledgements

This PhD was made possible by support and encouragement of various individuals and organisations. I am grateful to my research supervisor Prof. Sharit K. Bhowmik for his teaching and guidance at every step of this research. He instilled in me the urge to pursue the study rigorously and with extreme dedication. He has taught me to be patient, tenacious and his attention to minute details has helped me to be organised and meticulous. His faith in my abilities has boosted my self-confidence. Alongside my research, I am thankful to him for assigning me two projects—NASVI Project and TISS-UNDP project. These have been major learning experiences for me, as they gave me the opportunity to understand various facts associated with the conditions of street vendors not only in Mumbai but also across the country. These experiences helped me to extend my knowledge horizon on this topic of my interest.

I am grateful to my Doctoral Advisory Committee (DAC) members, Dr. Bino Paul G.D. Associate Professor, School of Management and Labour Studies, TISS and Dr. Mouleshri Vyas, Associate Professor, School of Social Work, TISS for their insightful suggestions at every stage of my research. It would not have been possible to pursue my work without adequate funds and I am grateful to the School of Management and Labour Studies and Centre for Research Methodology, TISS for looking after my financial requirements at the initial stage of my PhD and the International Center for Development and Decent Work (ICDD) funded by German Academic Exchange Service (DAAD) for providing me a scholarship. I am particularly thankful to Prof. (Dr.) Christoph Scherrer, ICDD, University of Kassel, Germany for his inputs and comments.

I should mention the names of all those persons to whom I am especially grateful for thoughtful discussions, comments and suggestions. I would like to mention the names of Prof. Jan Breman (University of Amsterdam), Prof. (Dr.) Hansjoerg Herr (Berlin School of Economics and Law Berlin), Prof. Chris Tilly (University of California, Los Angeles), Frank Hoffer (ILO) and Prof. Edward Webster (University of Witwatersrand, South Africa). I wish to thank Prof. P. C. Saxena, TISS for insightful discussions on sampling techniques.
I thank the staff of TISS library for their support and cooperation. Besides this, I would also like to thank the staff of libraries of Indira Gandhi Institute Development Research (IGIDR), Mumbai; Jawaharlal Nehru University (JNU), New Delhi; V. V. Giri National Labour Institute, Noda; London School of Economics (LSE), London; School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS), London; British Library, London; Keele University, UK; Berlin School of Economics and Law, Berlin and International Labour Organisation (ILO), Geneva for providing me enriching resources and pioneering works on the research topic. I thank Jamsetji Tata Centre for Disaster Management (JTCDM), TISS for helping me to prepare a map for showing the areas of study.

My friends and seniors have been a centre for cheerful discussions. I would like to thank Meghadeepa, Bhuvana, Ketoki, Sohini, Nadira, Denzil, Venkatesh, Apurb, Vachan, Sayani Di, Nandita Di, Soumitra Da, Kuntal and Mampi for encouraging me all through as also for all the scholarly debates and discussions. I wish to thank Hemantika for her support and motivation. I would like to thank my roommate Krishna for his kind support especially during data analysis. I would like to thank Noni and Mohan for passionately listening to my discourse and then critically appreciating me.

I would take the opportunity to thank my teachers at the Department of Economics, University of North Bengal (NBU), specially Prof. Jeta Sankirtayana and Mr. Govinda Choudhury for motivating me to join doctoral programme at TISS.

I deeply thank Late Nitin More who introduced me to the field. His untimely demise has left a deep sense of loss and I cannot ever forget his valuable contribution to my study.

The street vendors that participated in this study have been extremely cooperative and supportive. They were patient and tolerant and provided vital information related to their work. I am thankful to them for devoting their precious time for my study. This research effort would not have been achievable without the time and support of these people who are at the centre of the study. I truly hope that the results from this thesis would help in improving their livelihood in the near future. I am especially grateful to Mr. Daya Shankar Singh, Azad Hawkers’ Union, Mumbai, for giving me the opportunity to witness an actual eviction drive in Kandivali that helped me to understand the real conditions of work and the role played by a union. I am thankful to Mr. Kapoorchand Gupta, Shahid Bhagat Singh Feriwala Union, Mumbai, for giving me the opportunity of acquiring first-hand knowledge about street vendors’ unions. I am also thankful to Mr. Arbind Singh, National Coordinator of NASVI for his comments and suggestions. I specially thank Indira Gartenberg, Research Officer, School of Management and Labour Studies, TISS for helping me to develop the manuscript.

Finally, I am deeply indebted to my mother (Maa) for her relentless support, selfless love and blessings. I am also thankful to my loving brothers and sister, sisters-in-law, nieces and nephews, and all members of my extended family for their good wishes, love, support, and constant encouragement.
