ACKNOWLEDGMENT

I acknowledge my debt of gratitude to my guide, Dr. R. A. Malagi, Professor and Head, Department of English, School of Languages, Gujarat University, Ahmedabad, who has been a perennial source of inspiration and encouragement to me. I have immensely benefited by his vast erudition, his critical acumen and his fastidious, intellectual approach to literature. His valuable suggestions and unstinted help have enabled me to complete the thesis on time.

My thanks are due to Mr. A. P. C. V. Chokkalingam, the Hon. Secretary, V. O. C. College, Tuticorin for having allowed me to make use of the College Library. I take this opportunity to convey my heart-felt thanks to Dr. T. Prabhakar, Professor and Head, Department of English, Madras University, who made available to me some rare works of Eliot, that are out of print.

I wish to record my indebtedness to A. S. R. C., Hyderabad, for the copious material laid at my disposal.
including various contributions on T. S. Eliot. The xerox articles from numerous periodicals obtained from this source proved a tremendous help in my citations. I thank the British Council Library, Madras, not only for the valuable books on Eliot but for the photostat copies of articles from the journals, the Critical Quarterly and Listener, with which they provided me.
