I bow in reverence to Allah whose gracious blessings gave me the required zeal for the completion of this work.

At the outset, I take pleasure in expressing my debt of gratitude to Prof. Muhammad Iqbal (presently Head, Department of Botany, Hamdard University, New Delhi.) who taught me the first lesson in research and infused in me the enthusiasm and fervour in air pollution studies and stress physiology in particular. Besides him, I acknowledge nostalgically and with due reverence Prof. A.K.M. Ghouse, Department of Botany, A.M.U. Aligarh, who picked me straight from where I had left my earlier work and readily became my guide and counsellor. In fact, Prof. Ghouse's expert supervision and constant encouragement made the challenging task of writing this thesis both a pleasure and a source of great satisfaction.

A grateful acknowledgment is also due to Prof. Wazahat Hussain, Chairman, Department of Botany, A. M. U. Aligarh, for the provision of necessary laboratory and library facilities.

I also feel indebted to Prof. Ziauddin Ahmed, Department of Botany, A.M.U. Aligarh, who enlightened me with his valuable suggestions and boundless generosity throughout the period of my study in A.M.U. Aligarh.
I place on records my heartfelt thanks to my laboratory colleagues Mrs. Azra Parveen and Mr. S. Saheed for their cherished cooperation. Well deserved credit goes to the latter who efficiently assisted me in proof reading of the entire text and always accompanied me during my frequent trips to the experimental sites.

I also acknowledge with appreciation the assistance rendered to me in multifarious ways by Dr. Fareed A. Khan (Research Associate) and Dr. Parveiz R. Khan (Lecturer), Department of Botany, A.M.U. Aligarh.

Thanks are also due to many friends and mentors especially to Naseer H. Shah and M. Kunhalavi who in one way or the other provided their precious help and encouraged me in bringing out this work to shape.

The financial assistance rendered by the University in the form of Junior and Senior research fellowships is gratefully acknowledged.

I shall be failing in my duty if I do not mention the name of my parents, grandmother, sisters and brother for their forebearance and constant motivation for higher studies. They always stood shoulder to shoulder and their interest in all my past and present ventures provided me with a balanced perspective on life.
