ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

I express my heartfelt thanks and sincere gratitude to Dr. Parvaiz Talib, Internal Advisor at the Aligarh Muslim University for sparing his valuable time to hold thorough discussions on the various aspects of the Thesis from time to time during my study at AMU since May, 2003. The selective advice and guidance given by Dr. Talib, while going through the drafts of the chapters, at each stage have added much value to the compilation of this Thesis and also enriched my competence in project presentation. He gave me many challenging tasks in different phases of this research-work to make things really interesting, insightful and enjoyable for me. And I could clearly feel the depth of his concern and care about me especially before and during my Pre-submission seminar. Dr. Talib took personal care about me on each of my visits to Aligarh in a comprehensive manner. I have never been deprived of his blessings, guidance and active support. I am ever indebted to him.

I consider it fortunate that, I have been associated with Dr. P.P. Sengupta of NIT, Durgapur, the External Advisor, since the days of the Foundation Course of the PhD(Business Administration), way back in 2002. He has been a Friend, Philosopher and Guide in respect of all my professional studies and deliberations, all these years. His vision, structured approach and analytical ability have contributed to width and depth of this Thesis. I take this opportunity to express my gratitude to Dr. Sengupta.

Prof. Dilip Roy, Director, Centre for Management Studies, Burdwan University deserves a special mention here. He helped me understand some of the finer points relating to this research topic in a better way by asking me relevant questions at right time. He also gave me ideas and concepts on the possible methods of data analysis suitable for this research work. Prof. Roy, an extra-ordinary teacher of Statistics and an expert in Research Methodology, helped me generously to make difficult things simple for me.
I express my sincere thanks to Prof. G Bandopadhyay of the Department of Management Studies, NIT, Durgapur for his guidance and help in data analysis through SPSS. I also express my gratitude to Dr. D.S. Farooqui of Aligarh for his advice and guidance in data analysis. I am thankful to Mr. Amit Bhattacharya, a research scholar at NIT, Durgapur for his friendly support given to me on many occasions in terms of analysis and presentation of data in this research study.

I am ever grateful to India’s apex professional body in Management, All India Management Association (AIMA, New Delhi) and our country’s premier University, Aligarh Muslim University (AMU, Aligarh) for giving me the opportunity of pursuing higher studies through this Doctoral Research work.

I am grateful to SAIL/DSP management who have given me the opportunity of this research work that has been conducted in Durgapur Steel Plant with their permission and support. I am also thankful to the officers and the staff of Centre for HRD, DSP in particular for their co-operation and active support in various phases of the research work. I thank all the survey respondents and the MDP participants, who are the frontline and middle-level managers from various departments of DSP. Without the total organisational and individual support from Durgapur Steel Plant and its employees it would not be possible to undertake and complete this piece of research.

I am thankful to Dr. Daniel Goleman, the Guru of Emotional Intelligence and also a partner of the HayGroup, USA for encouraging me to do this research. I am ever grateful to Dr. Robert Emerling, a famous psychologist and a colleague of Dr. Goleman for timely advising me to contact the two excellent organisations, HayGroup and EI Consortium for this research work. I thank the EI Consortium for their help by regularly sending me their monthly newsletter and keeping me updated. I thank HayGroup for firstly evaluating the potential and depth of my research work and then permitting me to use their latest branded instrument (ECI-2.0) for my research work. My heartfelt gratitude and thanks are due to Dr. Daniel Goleman and Dr. Richard Boyatzis, the main designers of ECI-2.0. I am thankful to Dr. Steven Wolff of HayGroup for his continuous support and advice regarding various aspects of the research design and proper use of ECI-2.0. He has also enlightened me on the matters of EI as well as its impact on the individuals and the organisations.

I thank Dr. Dalip Singh, IAS for his detailed and insightful telephonic discussions with me on the matters of training for EI development and Prof. N.K. Chadha of Delhi University for his guidance on the measurement of EQ. Both of them encouraged me by giving ideas at a time when help and support were badly needed.

I sincerely thank Prof. Azhar Kazmi, Prof. Kaleem Mohd. Khan and Late Prof. S.M. Ozair, the former Deans, FMSR, AMU for their valuable guidelines in finetuning and finalising the research proposal and also the research design to a great extent.

I thank Mr. T K Bhowmick for his help in the typography and Computer Graphics of this Thesis work. Without his active support for quite a long time this thesis would not be complete on time.

I express my happiness, thanks and regards to my family members for their various kind of support, co-operation, good wishes and blessings in my research work. The continuous presence, encouragement and active involvement of my parents, Mrs. Bela Mandal and Mr. Manoranjan Mandal, my wife Mrs. Manjuri Mandal and my children Barsha (3 years old) and Aneek (a student of Class-8) have helped me immensely to keep my interest and enthusiasm in this research work growing for such a long period of time.
There are a good number of persons – professional colleagues, friends and well-wishers – I have been associated with, during the course of the work undertaken by me. They have all appreciated me for undertaking such a work over and above my other regular assignments and did whatever they could do to assist me, towards the fulfillment of those needs, for which I had to contact them. This has reinforced my faith that ‘good work’ always stands to be appreciated and has enriched the needed determination to continue the work, in spite of many odds, in terms of time and resources, during the course of the long drawn seven years: 2002-2008. I thank all of them from the bottom of my heart.

Finally, despite the support of so many persons / institutions / organisations, the flaws and inconsistencies in this study are mainly due to my personal limitations as a student.
