Newspapers report with cruel frequency the episodes of Burns in women. The episode may be a 'death by design', 'a cry for help' from a suffering woman or a matter of 'sheer carelessness'; the outcome is equally grave in terms of the physical and psycho-social morbidity and high mortality resulting from the episodes.

A visit to the Burns ward in any general hospital would stir a person with human concern looking at the plight of women with Burns. Why do women choose to submit to flames? What is responsible for the accident? What needs to be done to prevent these untimely, unnatural deaths and the miseries of physical-psycho social morbidity in those who survive the episodes?

Burns is a serious problem in terms of its magnitude and psycho-social consequences, irrespective of it being homicidal, suicidal or accidental in nature. The culture born symptomatology, the pressure of social norms and traditions, the socio-economic status and the life-style of the victims of Burns must be studied, for a rational action plan to follow. Hence the study.

The present work is a result of guidance and motivation of several well wishers.
I take this opportunity to acknowledge my gratitude to Dr. Rajgopal, Dr. Narsimham, Dr. Joshi of Operation Research Group for their valued guidance and help in the design and analysis.

My sincere thanks are due to Prof. P. M. Trivedi, Head of the Department of Surgery and Superintendent of the S.S.C. Hospital for permission to conduct the study and Dr. Mareeh Mehta, Dr. Bhaskar Vyas, Dr. S. N. Sharma and others for guidance in finalising medical aspects of the enquiry. I am also thankful to the subjects who have shared valuable information for the study.

Dr. R. M. Jhala, the forensic expert and author of several books on the subject has provided guidance and literature on the medico-legal aspects and has chaired my seminars on the subject with other experts viz. Prof. Mehr Nanavaty, Prof. Shankar Pathak, Dr. G. R. Sudame and Dr. Bharadi Dossi. I am grateful to all of them for the painstaking exercise.

Thanks are due to Kum. Saroj Halbo, Kum. Sadhana Adhikari and Kum. Rupande Shah for helping me in data collection. My friends and family members have helped me against all personal inconveniences. My sincere thanks to all of them.
Prof. Dr. Indira Patel, Head, Department of Social Work and my research guide who was also my teacher and guide earlier has shown immense faith and patience all through the study and has provided valuable guidance and motivation. I owe a deep sense of gratitude to her and express my profound thanks.

Thanks are also due to Prof. H.R. Rajyaguru, Dean, Faculty of Social Work, Mr. K.N. Sharma, the then Head of the department and all of my other colleagues for their encouragement.
