ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I feel it as a great pride and privilege to place on record my reverence and gratitude to Professor S. Subbaramaiah, Professor and Dean, Department of Business Administration, Sri Krishnadevaraya University, Anantapur, who initiated me into the field of research. A teacher among the saints and a saint among the teachers, he has been inspiring me throughout the period of my research work. I offer my pranams to him.

I hardly know how to express my gratitude to my research supervisor Dr. K. Nageswara Rao, Reader and Head, Department of Economics, Sri Krishnadevaraya University, Anantapur, for his inspiring, illuminating and untiring guidance and constant help throughout his work. His scholastic bent of mind, fraternal affection, devotional attachment and singular dedication to the cause of knowledge have attracted me towards him. But for his encouragement and support, I would not have completed this dissertation work. As such I am deeply indebted to him.
I am grateful to Sri G. Bhaskar Rao, Lecturer in Economics, Sri Krishnadevaraya University, Anantapur, for his all willing cooperation and help at different stages of this work.

I express my thanks to Mr. M. Balarama Raju and Mr. R. Ramaprasad, the research scholars in the department of Economics, Sri Krishnadevaraya University, Anantapur, for their whole hearted cooperation and help in conducting field survey.

I feel it as my duty to express my thanks to the executive engineers and staff, Panchayat Raj department of Anantapur, Dharmavaram and Penukonda divisions for their cooperation and help in rendering me the necessary records and information pertaining to rural water supply.

My thanks are also due to the authorities of the Sri Krishnadevaraya University, Anantapur and the Department of Economics of the same University for enrolling me as a research scholar and providing me all help and cooperation in continuing this work.

I take this opportunity to express my sense of gratitude to the library authorities of the Sri Krishnadevaraya University, Anantapur and Sri Venkateswara University, Tirupathi, for providing me the necessary books.
My special thanks are due to Sri A.H.Srinath for his excellent typing of this dissertation.

Lastly I thank one and all who have helped me directly and indirectly in undertaking this humble work, though I have not mentioned their names.
