Acknowledgement

I am immensely thankful to my supervising teacher Dr. A. Paslithil, whose inspiring and insightful guidance helped me to accomplish this task with great vigour. He has been a source of inspiration throughout my Ph.D tenure with his attitude and compassion.

I am also thankful to Dr. Pius Malekandathil, Associate Professor, Centre for Historical Studies, Jawaharlal Nehru University, who supervised me initially before he left for JNU. His scholarship in maritime history has greatly influenced this study to arrive in to the present silhouette.

Prof. K S Mathew has also helped me immensely by giving insightful information on various aspects of the topic. He has helped me by providing facilities to use his personal collections of books and other primary documents without which my study would not have come to the present shape.

Dr. P Rajendran, Archaeologist, University of Kerala has also given me valuable comments on archaeological artefacts and took my attention to the importance of coins in the study of this particular topic.

Prof. S Ramachandran Nair, who was formerly the Head of the Department of History, Sree Sankaracharya University of Sanskrit has ever been a source of inspiration for the successful completion of the study. His valuable comments were very much helpful during the embryonic spot of my thesis.

Dr. S Sivadasan also helped me immensely by giving valuable comments since my first doctoral committee. I always have tried to incorporate his comments with priority. Dr. N J Francis, Head of the Department of History Sree Sankaracharya University of Sanskrit has helped me by giving valuable comments.

Professor M Vijayalakshmi, who was in NSS College, Manjery, also helped me by giving insightful comments. Dr. Hemachandran, Curator of the Department of Archaeology has helped me by giving insightful information on archival materials.
