A PhD thesis is more than a compilation of concepts and ideas; it is an effort of a lifetime. The labours that go into it are many but it is not just the researcher’s sweat that can do complete justice to it. There is a network of people and services that enable it to become what it finally should be.

I am extremely grateful to my supervisor Professor (Dr) Sudhir Kumar, Professor in English, Department of Evening Studies, Panjab University, Chandigarh who has given me all the guidance and help that I needed all the time. Like an embroider holed up in a dark room, he has examined my work and embellished it with the finest ornamentation. The guidance that he has given me and the minute scrutiny of my manuscript has given it its final shape. Besides being an ideal guide, he is also a good human being who has a wonderful family with whom I’ve had many happy interactions.

I will always be grateful to the support of my husband Col GS Vohra and my daughter Sehajdeep for tolerating my late hours and frayed nerves during the course of my work. They have partaken of all my efforts and have been the most supportive and the most affected at the same time. I am also grateful to Dr Supinder Kaur, Assistant Professor, Panjab University Regional Centre, Ludhiana for her encouragement and support throughout my endeavour. She has given me the support of a family member.

I wish to thank Professor (Dr) Deepak Kapur, Director, Panjab University Regional Centre, Ludhiana for giving me the assistance that I needed during the course of my research work, especially closer to the date of submission.

I also wish to express my gratitude to Mr Karan Puri, proprietor of Atma Ram and Sons, Panjab University Campus, Chandigarh. He introduced me to Professor (Dr) Sudhir Kumar and suggested me to approach him to be my supervisor. He thus gave me an opportunity for an association for which I shall always be grateful.
